LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

THE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

MR. EDITOR.—The Board of Management of the Public Library desire to express through the columns of the press their grateful acknowledgment of the almost unanimous response of the citizens to their appeal for assistance. Confidence in the people encouraged them to commence the work and it is most gratifying to know that that confidence was not misplaced.

A few adverse criticisms have been made in respect to the building, while, again, most complimentary remarks have reached our ears. All such comments are, we believe, made in a kindly spirit, and, in reply, we can only say we did the best we knew how with the means at our disposal.

The impression has gone abroad in some quarters that more money has been subscribed than is required. Such is not the case. Further subscriptions are still desired in order to enable the Board to pay for the building and the necessary furniture, fixtures and equipment.

A number of citizens have not yet subscribed. It is hoped they will do so at once.

The thanks of the Board are also due to the press of the town, which has done all in its power to further our cause.

During the process of moving and re-arranging the books, the library was unavoidably closed for ten days, but the re-issuing of books was resumed on Saturday afternoon last. A more formal opening will take place next Saturday afternoon and evening, Nov. 2nd.

The public are all invited to inspect the building and all subscribers are particularly requested to examine closely the fitness of the new order of things for the work the Board has undertaken. The treasurer and the collector will be present to receive payment of all subscriptions not yet collected and as many new ones as possible. All members are requested to renew their annual subscriptions so as to begin the new era in the history of the library with as many subscriptions as possible dating from the opening.

The Board will be pleased to receive further donations of framed pictures and books, especially biographical, historical and scientific works and works of reference. The pictures so far received are most appropriate, but a great many more can be used in beautifying the interior.

The town can justly claim the distinction of having the best library building in the province. The library is steadily improving also, and it is to be hoped that all classes of citizens will avail themselves of the opportunity offered by making good use of the privileges extended to them.

horse race last Friday in Napanee.

Charles Wagar, of Enterprise, was in Napanee on business last Friday.

Miss Nellie Downey is the guest of Mr.
David Allison, Adolphustown.

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Kelly have moved into the house lately vacated by Mr. R. A.
Shorey, on Centre St.

Mr. and Mrs. Egerton Vanluven, of Yarker, and Mr. and Mrs. Zara Van-luven, of Moscow, were guests of Jailor Vanluven on Thursday.

Messrs. W. H. Hunter, Wm. Miller,
John Soby, Chief Rankin, Lester Scott, Merrile Sills, Sidney Scott, Homer Miles, and R. H. Baker form a hunting party in the back country. They left on Monday.
Their head quarters will be at Clawa.

Mrs. Percy Clark, of New Rochelle, New York, after spending the past three weeks with Mrs. W. A. Baker, left this week for Kingston, proceeding from there to Ottawa.

Mr. Lye, organist of St. Philips' church, Toronto, and pipe organ builder, was here on business this week. He favored quite a large company of music loving people at Newburgh on Wednesday to an impromptu recital, which was much enjoyed by all.
Mr. and Mrs. John A. Shibley and a number of friends drove out to hear the music, among them being Miss Lillian M. Hall and Mrs. Burritt, who joined in making up a programme, which was very enjoyable.

Wuu the Lotus Club.

Once was a fellow, Wu Ting Fang.
Came from the land of Li Hung Chang.
Only an everyday Chinaman—
Bob-tail breeches and bamboo fan—
Crammed with Confucius and Genghis
Khan.

They fetched him forth from Washington

To the Loftus Club for a night of fun;
They crowded his crop with pabulum,
They tried to rattle his wits with rum.
One, Lawrence, jumped up and pulled down his vest,

While he ordered a toast to the curious guest:—
"Let's drink to the health of Wu Ting
Fang,

The college chum of Li Hung Chang, Who comes to speak in the real Chinese

At the special request of Carnegie;
So drink him deep in a jug of sack
And hoist him high in apple jack—There's been many a guest at our festive board

From a royal freak to a bankrupt lord—
We's dined Mark Twain and wine'd Depew.

But we never struck anything yet like Wu."

Smart as a rat was Wu Ting Fang
And cute like his countryman, Li Hung Chang.

He saw the plot of the Lotus spree
And quaffed but small of their Sargaree.

Slow he arose in his silken bags,
Sly he winked at the Lotus wags.

"Friends," quoth he, in his Chinese twang.

"Behold the diplomat, Wu Ting Fang!
I come from the land of Li Hung
Chang,

Where the fire-cracker first went off with a bang,

Where the gong of the pioneer chestnut rang;

I'm grateful for this graft of grub
And I've solved the scheme of the Lotus club.

You can't make a capital joke of me
For I'm as sober as I can be;

I'm sorry to spoil your singular fun.
But I don't drink like a son-of-a-gun;

And I swear by the head of a Chinaman—
By the Gods, Confucius and Genghis
Khan—
By the red ey'd dragon of Li Hung
Chang—
By the fiery face of this festive gang—
Don't try your American tricks on me.
For I'm pretty slick for a heathen Chinee."

THE PARSON'S YOUNG WIFE.

"Well, now, for my part, Miss Post, as I was telling them two ladies, I always liked your husband's preaching."

Mrs. Dale measured out two yards of lace and counted three dozen pearl buttons, large and small, before she looked up into the face of the pastor's young wife. The rosy cheeks were pale now, and the pretty mouth was slightly drawn. It seemed as if it would not take much to cause Mrs. Post's blue eyes to fill with tears.

Mrs. Dale shrewdly guessed as much, but she said nothing, except to wish her customer a pleasant good morning as she went away.

Delia Post knew well enough what to surmise from the remarks made by the portly widow. Somebody must have been criticising Homer's sermons, or Mrs. Dale would not have defended them.

Into the door of the pretty gabled cottage which the good people of West End had provided for their pastor the young wife went and straight into the tiny study where her husband sat at his desk.

"Has something troubled you, Delia, dear?" he asked kindly, laying down his pen.

"Nothing much;" but as if to contradict her words she sat down in an easy chair and commenced to cry.

"What can it be?" thought the minister, as he vainly tried to soothe his wife.

In a few moments the story came out, for Delia Post was very young indeed—only just 19—and she had not learned to keep her troubles shut up within her own heart, rather than add another burden to the one who was so dear to her.

Mr. Post's face cleared.

"Is that all, child? I certainly thought you had bad news from home. Of course, everybody does not like my preaching. How could that be possible? I do my best, and, with the Lord's help, I trust that some word may comfort or cheer a longing lonely soul."

"You are so good," replied Delia, "and Homer, I do not help you at all. I was never cut out for a preacher's wife. Do you remember how I laughed that day at Sister Hathaway's, when she was telling about her son's misdeeds? Wasn't it awful? And how she glared at me."

Mrs. Post's tears had quite disappeared now, and her husband looked down lovingly at the sunny face.

"Oh, dear, I entirely forgot those biscuits. They'll be all burned up."

With a gay laugh she sprang down the stairs singing, and the minister turned again to his work.

"She little knows how much she helps me with her sweetness and cheeriness," he murmured. "But I must be more particular about my sermon next Sunday. I noticed that Brother McPherson spoke coldly to me last week and I fear that I do need Sister Dale's kind words."

Mr. Post had married Delia Harold about a year before. She was the daughter of a wealthy merchant and entirely without the experience needful for a preacher's wife, although she was a happy Christian and loved her husband dearly.

"Mr. Post is not a brilliant preacher," said Brother McPherson that evening at an informal meeting held at his own house. "He is sincere and good. I believe we could get along with him if he were alone, but his wife—"

wife sitting there so smilingly and cheerful?" returned Mr. White, justly indignant at the question.

"So good of them to call, wasn't it, Homer?" said Delia, enthusiastically, as she put away the precious Venetian glasses in which she had passed lemonade to the guests. "It shows how fond they are of you."

Mr. Post was leaning on the mantel and did not seem to hear the remark. He knew very well that those five men had not come in to make a friendly call. There had been something at the bottom of it. But if there was something wrong, why had they not mentioned it?

As the months passed by Mrs. Post went on her way with a calm and undisturbed spirit. It never occurred to her that people did not approve of her. Everybody had loved her at home.

There was one place where Mrs. Post's actions were above reproach, and even strict old Brother McPherson acknowledged that. This was in the Sunday-school, where the minister's wife was very successful.

There were four girls in her class. One was Mary White, another was a young woman from Mrs. Dale's store, the third was a girl about 13, and the fourth, the one person whom fastidious Mrs. Post disliked, although she tried hard to combat the feeling, was Katie Mason, the maid-of-all-work at the hotel in the town. It was not because Katie was a working girl that Mrs. Post did not like her—not at all. Delia would have loved anyone, without stopping to think whether they washed dishes for a living or spent their time in elegant leisure, if they were only clean. This unfortunate girl was not only untidy in her person, but she was repulsive in her appearance. Try as she would, Mrs. Post could not bring herself to touch her. But she soon learned that the one joy of Katie's life was to come to Sunday-school and be near the beautiful lady. The gentle voice, the well-bred manner, the perfect toilette, were new to her, and seemed to lift the minister's wife into the sphere of an angel. Each Sunday Mrs. Post prayed that she might be able to say something to help this poor girl, whose eyes had first seen the light in a workhouse, and whose miserable life had been passed in hard labor and the lowest surroundings.

Ryan's hotel stood on a corner of the main street of the village, and its flickering lights burned all night long, while from within came the sound of shuffling cards and clinking glasses. Katie often worked till midnight, and was up again at dawn, doing the heaviest drudgery.

One day Mrs. Post came in with her arms full of the spring blossoms and turned the parlor into a bower of beauty.

"Isn't it lovely?" she exclaimed, hearing her husband's footstep behind her.

"Very," he replied absently. "Delia, there's a man here who wants you very much to come down to Ryan's hotel. There has been an accident, and Katie, the girl in your Sunday-school class has been hurt—badly, I judge."

"She's a-going fast," responded the man, touching his hat awkwardly. He was the barman at Ryan's.

"But," as he said to a crowd of friends later, "I knows a lady when I sees her, and that there preacher's wife's one, you bet. She turned pale as a rag, and the minister, he says, 'Now, darling, you don't need to go. I'll go.' 'Of course I'll go,' she says, and I says kind of quiet like, 'She's calling for you, mem.' But you better believe I didn't tell her how she was hurt, nor how she looked. I just couldn't."

So it was that Delia Post went into the presence of the dying girl without knowing that she had been

MARTHA CRAWFORD.

"GRANNY" AND THE PRINCESS.

A Pleasant Story of the Wife and the King of England.

In the village of Dersing (writes a Sandringham visitor) there is an old, old lady, living in the cottage at the corner, who is very proud of many things in her little home. They were given from time to time by Queen Victoria. On sunny mornings "Granny" comes out in her white sun net and potters about among flowers. Then is the best time to talk to her.

"The Queen?" she says with a puzzled look. "I don't know you mean, sir." Sudden as she members, and a smile lights up her old eyes and plays with the wrinkles of her face. "Is it the princess you mean?" she says.

You tell her yes, and she says demly: "Ah, my dear, you know the princess, do you?" then, speaking softly and smiling, she tells you the folk characteristics: told:

"One morning two winters ago, I was out on a Tuesday, and I was doin' my bit of ironin'—came a knock at the door. I took notice. I thought it was my son-in-law, and he just came and walks in. So I went on with my ironin'. Presently there came another knock. So I calls, 'What's that?' because the iron was nigh hot, I didn't stop. And there, dear, it was the princess and daughter, and I'd kept them in me last week and I fear that I do need Sister Dale's kind words.

Mr. Post had married Delia Harold about a year before. She was the daughter of a wealthy merchant and entirely without the experience needed for a preacher's wife, although she was a happy Christian and loved her husband dearly.

"Mr. Post is not a brilliant preacher," said Brother McPherson that evening at an informal meeting held at his own house. "He is sincere and good. I believe we could get along with him if he were alone, but his wife—"

There was an expressive pause, and then Brother White took up the tale.

"Yes, Brother McPherson, it's the wife that is the trouble! Not that I see very much amiss in the little girl myself. She's just the age of my Mary, and I doubt if I should dare to recommend her to any one of our young preachers—but all the women are against her."

At Mr. White's remark, Mrs. McPherson sniffed audibly.

"I don't know as it's more the women than the men; but I do think that the way she wears her hair in that sort of pug on top, and then curls around her face, is a shame and disgrace for a preacher's wife, or at least for our preacher's wife."

There was a general chorus of dissent from the women, but Mr. McPherson added, with a sly look at his wife:

"It's very becoming to her, Margaret."

To this frivolous statement his wife vouchsafed no reply.

As the conversation became general, bits of criticism might be heard.

"She has four silk dresses."

"And a hat to match each one."

"And a sealskin cloak."

This last item of attire seemed to be particularly objectionable and the talk was waxing warm when Mrs. Harper, a little pale-faced woman who had hitherto kept silence, said quietly:

"Mrs. Post was very good to my David when he was sick. It was she who was with him when he—"

The poor mother could not say more and the meeting was most effectively broken up. However, it was settled between the men, nearly all of whom were leading members of the church that a change would be desirable.

To this end a committee was appointed to wait on the pastor a week later determined to—as gently as possible—acquaint him with their decision.

These five gentlemen Mrs. Post ushered with great graciousness into the tiny parlor. Excusing herself to call her husband, she gave the visitors time to look around the room and find still more cause for complaint against the minister's wife.

When Mrs. Post came to West End she had found a square parlor with four low windows, a brilliant scarlet carpet and several stiff chairs. With good taste and the judicious use of a little money she had transformed it. A pretty rug in subdued colors hid the objectionable carpet. Soft, inexpensive curtains were at the windows, and a few good engravings and choice photographs gave character to the white walls.

After a moment's delay the minister entered, and to the annoyance of all, after him tripped his wife, who drawing a low chair nearer to the light, commenced some embroidery, listening, meanwhile, with deep attention to the conversation.

It was a discomfited committee which issued from the low porch an hour later.

"Why didn't you say something?" asked Brother McPherson, impatiently, of Brother White.

"How could I, with the minister's

"She's a-going fast," responded the man, touching his hat awkwardly. He was the barman at Ryan's. "But," as he said to a crowd of friends later, "I knows a lady when I sees her, and that there preacher's wife's one, you bet. She turned pale as a rag, and the minister, he says, 'Now, darling, you don't need to go. I'll go.' 'Of course I'll go,' she says, and I says kind of quiet like, 'She's calling for you, mem.' But you better believe I didn't tell her how she was hurt, nor how she looked. I just couldn't."

So it was that Delia Post went into the presence of the dying girl without knowing that she had tripped on the cellar stairs with a lighted lamp in her hand and that she was burned beyond recognition.

It was an awful sight that the inexperienced girl saw when she entered the garret where the drudge was permitted to sleep. There were good rooms in the house; but although the innkeeper's wife had no wish to be unkind to the injured girl, it had not occurred to her to have her carried into one of them.

"Oh, Homer," exclaimed the minister's wife, clinging in desperation to the strong man's arm.

Then there came a moaning cry from the shapeless figure upon the bed:

"Bring Mrs. Post. Oh, bring my teacher. I love her so."

Without another moment's hesitation Delia went forward and gathered the poor disfigured head in her hands. She had shrunk from touching Katie's hand before; now she stooped and kissed the bit of forehead which was not covered with bandages.

"I am here Katie, and I am going to stay with you," she said.

In spite of her husband's protest Delia remained in that dimly lighted room all night. The pain which poor Katie suffered was indescribable and her moans were so piteous that Mrs. Ryan retired to the kitchen, where she could not hear them, leaving the minister's wife alone.

Mr. Post waited downstairs, and his brave wife sat by the sick girl's bedside, holding one bandaged hand in hers, while she murmured comforting words or sang in a low, sweet voice. Her husband heard it in the middle of the night and thanked God He had given him such a wife.

It was not until the next evening that Katie's weary feet slipped over the brink of time into eternity. As her sufferings grew worse, she clung more tightly to the soft white hand and listened to the loving words which the minister's wife spoke. Mr. Post hardly recognized Delia in this woman whose tender ministrations helped the wounded, stricken, homely girl to die in peace.

Mrs. McPherson and some other ladies of the church came in during the next day, and they were amazed at the bearing of the woman whom they had criticized for having four silk dresses and a sealskin cloak. These things seemed so insignificant in this chamber of death—and such a horrible death.

A NOVEL LUNCHEON.

A colonial celebrity the other day related a pleasant reminiscence of a luncheon party in the Far East. It happened among the Dyaks. He had been away from home once, and, on returning found his man had been sent to prison for theft—thieving is the commonest of crime out there; so he invited the magistrate to lunch. Then, to his dismay, he found his cook also had been incarcerated. He put it to the magistrate. What could be done? No cook, no luncheon!

"Oh," said the dignitary, "we'll have him out on bail to cook the lunch and then send him back."

And they did.

denly "Ah, my dear, you know the princess, do you?" then, speaking softly and smiling herself, she tells you the following characteristic tale:

"One morning two winters ago, let me see, it was a Tuesday, I was doing my bit of ironing—came a knock at the door. I took notice. I thought it was my son-in-law, and he just came and walks in. So I went on with ironing. Presently there came another knock. So I calls, 'What but, because the iron was nice hot, I didn't stop. And there, dear, it was the princess and daughter, and I'd kept them of knocking, and it was a bitter thing. I was so flurried that I know what to do. I stood with heater in my hand, and all I do was to make my curtsy. But highness didn't seem to mind. She says, 'Good mornin' Gr. We just walked in to see how were this cold mornin'.' I had over my hurry by this time, dusted two chairs for them to sit on and put my iron on the fire. The princess wouldn't have me. She turned to her daughter and said, 'You take Granny's iron she sits down and talks to me the young princess took the iron ironed, while I sat down and with her mother.'"

Granny rose and went to a chair. She took out a handkerchief with a gay colored border, brought it across. "She said that, my dear, just as you see put it away and never used it. Well, the princess, her mother me talked. She told me as how liked the country better than don, where she couldn't walk, or go out very much. Then she told me about Jim and Sarah and baby. I told her the child troubled with his teeth, and she remembered when her own were bad with their teeth and trouble she had with them. Stayed and talked for near hour. WOMEN WHO HATE MEN.

SEVERAL INSTANCES WHERE THEY HAVE SHOWN IT.

The “Champion Man-Hater” of Europe Died a Few Weeks Ago in Vienna.

It is perhaps not unnatural that some women should have no great reason for loving the sterner sex;
but few happily carry their prejudices to the same extent as Fraulein Marie Irrgang, who died in Vienna a few weeks ago.

Fraulein Irrgang claimed the remarkable distinction of being the “champion man-hater” of Europe and no one has ventured to dispute the right to her title. She was loyal to her sexual antagonism to the last, for she left the strictest injunctions in her will that no male should be allowed to take part in her funeral procession to the church of Lichtental.

But even Marie’s decree could not prevent the “mere males” from looking on, and the streets of Vienna were densely packed with men and boys, curious to gaze on such a unique procession. Her corpse was followed by an enormous crowd of women of all ages and positions, and by deputies from every female society in Austro-Hungary. But, alas!
the banner of the Austrian Jungfrauen-Verein was so heavy that no woman could carry it, and it was actually borne proudly aloft by a man, the only male in the procession.

Fraulein Irrgang had a rival in Fraulein Gretchen Marie Schultz, an old maiden lady, who lived for very many years in a suburb of Berlin, and who was known throughout Germany as the “man-hater.” Gretchen had

A LOVE DISAPPOINTMENT

nearly half a century ago, and took a solemn vow that she would never speak to or, if possible, look on a man again so long as she lived; and as she was a woman of some wealth she was able to keep her vow to the last.

She bought a suitably retired house about half-a-dozen miles from Berlin, and equipped it from basement to attic with furnishings specially made for her by women’s hands. “No male hands,” she declared, “should contaminate anything she touched,” quite forgetful, poor woman, that the very house she lived in was built by her enemy.

She surrounded herself with a chosen band of women, each of whom took a similar vow of hatred against the sex; and so skillfully managed matters that for nearly fifty years she neither saw nor spoke to a male of any description.

On a headstone in a Yorkshire churchyard may be seen this strange inscription: “Sacred to the memory of A— H—, who died on March 13th, 1841. After a more than common experience of the falseness and frailty of man, she spent twenty years of happy life without holding any communication with any member of the sex she had such good reason for despising.”

This good lady, of whom many strange and some amusing stories are still current in the district, had perhaps

SUFFICIENT REASON

for holding men in low esteem; for,
as a child, she was cruelly treated and abandoned by her father; as a girl she was basely deceived by a lover to whom she was ardently devoted; and of her two husbands one dissipated her fortune and abandoned her and the second attempted to take her life.

An amusing story is told of a fused to sell at the price.

Though still a boy, Kubelik, the violinist obtains an average fee of $1,000 for each of sixty recitals.
The young violinist’s agent was the witness of a touching sight at Prague recently. Towards the close of the day an old man, apparently between eighty and ninety, who had evidently travelled far on foot, judging by the dust on his clothes and the weariness of his movement, approached the hotel where Kubelik was staying. In a bandana handkerchief he was carefully carrying a supply of fruit, eggs, and butter.
These were an offering for Jan, and the aged donor who had walked so far with his present was no other than the young violinist’s grandfather.

Prominent among lady artists, by reason of her many successes, is Miss Maudie Goodman, whose delightful child studies have won for her such world-wide popularity and renown. In private life Miss Goodman is Mrs. Arthur Scanes, for she was married in 1882. It was soon after she married Mr. Scanes that Miss Goodman came prominently before the public on account of her picture, entitled “You Darling.”
This picture was first hung on the line at the Royal Academy. Miss Goodman’s well-known picture,
“Want to See the Wheels Go Round,” was suggested to her by her own little son peeping into the interior of an old grandfather’s clock.
This has been one of the most successful of her pictures, and it is estimated that no less a sum than $50,000 has been made out of the sale of engravings.

The Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, the new President of the United States, is the youngest ruler his country has ever known. He is, perhaps, also in many ways the most versatile, and though it is the fashion to consider him as something in the nature of a melodramatic hero, he has many of the traits of the literary and scientific man. A story has been told of him which, whether true or not,
shows a characteristic side of him.
He was on business in a bar in the West one day when a typical “Westerner” entered and invited all the men there to drink with him, at the same time drawing a revolver from his pocket to compel them to accept the invitation. Mr. Roosevelt sat on doing his business, and the man, noticing this lack of regard for his invitation, pointed the revolver at him, remarking that he had invited everyone to drink, asked Mr. Roosevelt whether he was coming. The future President rose up and went to the bar, saying, “I have just had a drink and I don’t particularly want another, but if I must I must.”
His words took him up to the bully, and as he spoke the last ones he suddenly shot out his right fist with all his might into the man’s face, and the bully dropped to the floor.

SEMI-SAVAGE WARRIORS.

GREAT BRITAIN WILL NOT HESITATE TO USE THEM.

The Announcement in the House of Commons of Great Importance.

One of the most important announcements that has been made in the British Parliament for many a year past, says the Chicago Tribune, was the declaration of Colonial Secretary Joseph Chamberlain, that the English Government will not hesitate henceforth to employ in Europe or elsewhere her Indian and African troops. It is an announcement of the most profound interest to the entire civilized world, but more especially to great powers such as the United States, Russia, France and Germany, which have millions of semi-barbarous races subject to their rule. So sensational, indeed, is the announcement made by the English Government about the employment of dusky warriors in European warfare that an international congress is likely to be summoned to discuss the matter.

REVISED RULES OF WAR.

Curiously enough, the peace conference at The Hague two years ago, when the rules of war were subjected to a revision, carefully avoided any reference to the matter, that is to say, in the shape of any steps towards a specific engagement by treaty to refrain from the employment of Asiatic and African troops in civilized warfare, and the only action taken by the delegates that can be considered as in any way bearing upon the question was the declaration of their adhesion to the “accepted laws of warfare among civilized nations,” which comprise a restriction “prohibiting the use of bodies of troops composed of individuals of savage or semi-civilized races.” Neither England nor Russia nor yet France was desirous of binding itself to abstain from availing itself of the services of its dusky soldiers in the event of a war in which its national existence was likely to be at stake, and the matter therefore was by a sort of tacit agreement kept out of the discussions at The Hague.

It has until now been generally understood, however, by these three powers that if native troops were employed it would be only in the last extremity, and this view has been strengthened by the extraordinary pains which the English Government has taken to prevent the warlike Basuto tribes, who are under British rule and most loyal to the British flag, from taking part in the war against the Boers. In the war of 1870 the French at one moment brought a few native regiments of Turcos from Algeria. But so great was the outcry raised not only in Germany and elsewhere in Europe, but even in France, against their employment that they were hastily shipped back to Africa long before the close of the war, although they were magnificent fighters and from a military point of view of infinitely greater value than the untrained levies of “mobots,” the majority of whom had never handled a gun before in their lives.

“THE LAW OF NATIONS.”

The action of France shows better than anything else how strong has been the prejudice in the past against the use of semi-civilized races in the wars of Christian states with one another, and the extent to which it has been condemned by that species of unwritten and undefined code known as “the law of nations.”
It is a sentiment that found expression in the eighteenth century at Westminster when the great Lord

the princess, do you see?" and speaking softly and smiling to her, she tells you the following story:

"One morning, two winters ago—see, it was a Tuesday, 'cause I doin' my bit of ironin'—there a knock at the door. I didn't notice. I thought it was Jim, son-in-law, and he just knocks all in. An amusing story is told of a persistent vicar who made several determined efforts to interview this strange parishioner. She equally resolutely refused to admit him; and on the last occasion dropped a note at his feet from an upper window. On it was written this message: "Go away! You know I hate men, and you parsons are the worst of the lot." The parson never called again.

Fortunately, perhaps, the majority of these man-haters are content to allow their antagonism to die with them; but Marie Lenoir, who died a few months ago in Paris, was not of this order. By her will she left the whole of her estate, amounting to 75,000 francs, in trust to two lady friends "to use the interest thereof in waging warfare, in such ways as may seem fitting to them, against the selfishness and tyranny of men."

PROMINENT PEOPLE.

Gossip About Some of the World's Great Folks.

Every time Mr. Pierpont Morgan goes abroad he makes it a point to acquire a number of valuable souvenirs of the trip. Recently, besides a number of rare paintings, he purchased for himself a Persian rug, probably the rarest of its kind in existence, for which he paid $25,000. The rug measures 10 feet 6 inches by 19 feet, was made of Persian silk in Tabriz, Persia, and was woven by Mohammedan friars 150 years ago for a Shah. It took sixteen years to weave the rug.

Attention has been called to the sympathetic intimacy established between King Edward and the late President McKinley in their private correspondence. It is not generally known that they both publicly acknowledged "Nearer, my God, to Thee," as their favorite hymn. A few years ago, when Prince of Wales, His Majesty told Mr. Stead that he liked it best. All the world now knows that the stricken President murmured the familiar line on his deathbed.

It is a curious fact that two of what may be called the greatest gun inventors of the time are American-born men. As is well known, the country of Uncle Sam claims Sir Hiram Maxim as its own; while the other celebrity who was born under the Stars and Stripes is Dr. Richard J. Gatling, who completed his eighty-third year recently. It is hardly necessary to say that the veteran is the inventor of the famous Gatling gun, which has been computed to have killed a quarter of a million men since 1862.

Joaquin Miller, "the poet of the Sierras," has "struck it rich," to use the expressive vernacular of the West, in which he lives. It is not literature, however, which has given him his fortune, but oil. Eighteen months ago he went to Texas and bought 700 acres of pasture land at $10 an acre. There was then no thought of oil, and he began the construction of a cattle ranch. Very soon after a large "gusher" was drilled, and as his land was in the middle of the now famous oil-fields, he has just been offered $100,000 for

HER FINGERS CAME IN TOO LATE.

Oliver Wendell Holmes enjoyed nothing so much as a clever retort, even if it happened to be at his own expense. One day, at an entertainment, he was seated near the refreshment table, and observed a little girl looking with longing eyes at the good things. With his invariable fondness for children he said, kindly:—

"Are you hungry, little girl?"
"Yes, sir," was the reply.
"Then why don't you take a sandwich?"
"Because I haven't any fork."
"Fingers were made before forks," said the doctor, smilingly.
The little girl looked up at him, and replied, to his delight:—
"Not my fingers."

"Do you see that prosperous-looking fellow over there?" "Yes."

trained levies of "moblots," the majority of whom had never handled a gun before in their lives.

The action of France shows better than anything else how strong has been the prejudice in the past against the use of semi-civilized races in the wars of Christian states with one another, and the extent to which it has been condemned by that species of unwritten and undefined code known as "the law of nations." It is a sentiment that found expression in the eighteenth century at Westminster, when the great Lord Chatham denounced with such eloquent indignation the employment by the British commanders of red Indian tribes against the revolutionary forces, and there are few newspapers, either in the United States or in Europe, that did not express their abhorrence of the use of Cossacks and of Circassians by Russia in suppressing the Hungarian insurrection of 1848, and of the Sultan's action in endeavoring to put down the rising in Bulgaria in 1876 by means of irregular bashi-bazouks recruited from the most barbarous portion of his dominions.

A couple of years afterwards, at the time when England seemed to be on the verge of a war with Russia a small contingent of Indian cavalry was brought to Malta, which created such a outcry and storm of protest even in Great Britain that the men were quickly shipped back to Bombay. Their visit to Malta, however, served to remind Continental Europe of the fact that the military resources of England were not restricted solely to her standing army at home, and that her forces in India must be taken into account—and this is probably all that Lord Beaconsfield had in view when he brought the Indian contingent to the Mediterranean.

ORIENTAL TROOPS IN WARFARE.

It is to Japan in a great measure that must be attributed the recent removal of this prejudice against the employment of Oriental troops in warfare among Christian nations and the determination of the British Government to dispense with all restrictions which have until now prevented the use of its Indian and African soldiers in conflicts with civilized powers. For the objection to these warriors has been based altogether on the belief that when their passions had been aroused by the excitement and turmoil of battle it would be impossible to prevent them from indulging in savagery and cruelty, which while natural to barbarous races, would be repulsive in the extreme to white people. But during the recent campaign in China the Japanese distinguished themselves among all the other allied troops by their indignant refusal to participate in any of the rapine, the cruelty, and the altogether inexcusable barbarity which disgraced most of the European contingent engaged in the military operations in the Celestial Empire.

England's example, unless checked by an international conference, will undoubtedly be followed by other great powers possessed of Asiatic and African dependencies, and thus an altogether new element, of which no account has been taken until now, will be introduced into modern warfare among civilized nations. In fact, it is possible that in course of time the white races may eventually come to use none but their dark-hued, non-Christian lieges for fighting purposes, and that in this way continental great powers of Europe, such as France, Germany, Russia, etc., may be relieved of that compulsory military service which is such a drawback to trade and industry.

PLUNGED OVER NIAGARA.

A Bay City, Michigan, Woman Makes the Venture in a Barrel.

A despatch from Niagara Falls, Ont., says:—One of the greatest as well as most daring feats ever attempted was accomplished here on Thursday, and that by a woman, when Mrs. Anna Edson Taylor, in her barrel, navigated the Upper Canadian rapids, and plunged over the Horseshoe Falls into the gorge beneath, a distance of 165 feet, and lives to tell the tale of her remarkable trip. She had a well-made barrel, padded with cushions, and equipped with a harness of straps to assist her in making her trip in safety, and some degree of comfort. She arrived here some ten days ago with her manager, Frank M. Russell, from Bay City, Mich., where she had been engaged in teaching. The barrel came with them. They secured a cat and sent it over in the barrel. The cat lived, and Mrs. Taylor immediately prepared to make the trip. All preparations had been made for several days in advance. At 2:23 o'clock Thursday afternoon Mrs. Taylor stepped into a row boat to which the barrel had been attached, and manned by Fred Truesdale and William Holman, started for the head of Grass Island. Another boat with Rufus Robinson and Fred Evans followed in case of assistance. At Grass Island Mrs. Taylor slipped off her outer clothes and clad in a jacket and short skirt she squeezed into the barrel, the top was put on, and air was pumped into the barrel with a bicycle pump. The boat with the barrel in tow left the island at 3:50 p. m., and the men rowed over towards the Canadian shore.

After going down as far as they dared, the men cast the barrel loose at 4:05 p. m. It started slowly on its voyage down the river. Before reaching the brink of the Horseshoe it had nearly a mile of wild tempestuous rapids to navigate. These rapids consist of a series of cascades, and by some are considered more dangerous and picturesque than the Whirlpool Rapids. The barrel while going down this long stretch of tossing waters was watched by thousands of people who had come down from Buffalo and other neighboring towns.

PLUNGED OVER THE FALLS.

It was just 4.23 p. m. when the barrel plunged over the Horseshoe Falls, having taken nearly twenty minutes to make the trip down. Many bets were made that the woman was dead before she reached the falls. The barrel reappeared inside of a minute in the boiling waters below, and then it commenced to circle around and gradually came nearer the shore, until it was caught in an eddy and whirled up towards some rocks, on which a party of four men were waiting for it. They seized the barrel at 4.40 p. m., pulled it out of the water, and ripped off the cover to the manhole. They saw Mrs. Taylor move and speak, and waved their hands to the crowd above. That was the signal that the woman was alive, and a big shout went up from the crowds on the banks.

It was impossible to get Mrs. Taylor out in her exhausted condition. Part of the top of the barrel was sawed off and the woman lifted out. Then it was discovered that she had sustained a severe scalp wound, and blood was dripping down her jacket. She was also bruised and suffering from shock. A boat was secured, and she was placed in it and rowed to the Maid of the Mist landing, where a carriage took her to her boarding house.

LIKELY TO LIVE.

Dr. W. H. Hodge, the leading physician and surgeon of the city, was summoned and dressed Mrs. Taylor's injuries. He announced that she was in pretty bad shape, but thought she would pull through. Mrs. Taylor was asked to give an account of her trip, but all she could say was: "I was whirled around at lightning speed and then I crashed into the rocks three times—oh, my head, my head."

The woman cannot give any clear statement, and probably never will. The trip was a wild and dangerous one from beginning to end, and the terrible drop of 165 feet is probably what occasioned the shock. The concussion threw her against the barrel and produced the cut in the head despite the cushions and straps.

Mrs. Taylor states that she is 43 years of age, was born at Auburn, N. Y. She was educated in the Common schools, was married at nineteen to a doctor, who died a year later, leaving her with a child. The child died later, and since then Mrs. Taylor has earned her livelihood by teaching, having taken a course in the State Normal School at Albany, N. Y.

When asked why a woman of her education and attainments should seek such notoriety she said she had not made any money and thought if she could accomplish some such act as this she could make a lot of money and be forever independent. She however, took the precaution to leave the address of a sister, Mrs. Jane M. Kendall, of Eddytown, N. Y., to be notified.

HONEY EXHIBIT.

Ontario Bee-Keepers' Association at the Pan-American.

The magnificent display of honey at the Pan-American Exposition from the Ontario Bee-Keepers' Association is admired by all beholders. The space occupied is 18 x 24 feet. The honey is placed in glass honey jars and arranged in pyramids on plate glass; this shows off its rare transparency to great advantage. The combs are arranged in neat cases which contain from two to six sections each. The fronts of the cases are glass. Altogether there are from three to four thousand pounds of honey wax mould and wax manufactured into foundations. The honey is produced from Alsac clover, white clover and linden. June and July are the months in which the best Canadian honey is produced. The entire exhibit is tastefully decorated with plants, and great credit is due to Mr. John Newton, President of the Association, for the artistic installation. This tempting display draws forth many exclamations of surprise from visitors.

The object of the association in making a display is to demonstrate to the world that Canada produces some of the finest honey known. The association has made exhibits at the Colonial Exhibition, London, England, at the World's Fair, Glasgow, and at the Pan-American this year. At all the expositions the display and quality of the honey has excelled. The association has since its organization in 1880 tried to impress upon the Canadian bee-keepers that it is their duty to produce

Peas—Are steady at 71c north and west and 72c middle freights.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

Butter—Fine new made dairies are in good demand, choice pound rolls in particular being much sought after. Large rolls of dairy are in even better demand. Poor stuff and medium grades continue to offer in large quantities, and the demand for them is weak. Large rolls sell as high as 16c, dairy pails and tubs bringing the same figure. If extremely choice 16½c can be obtained. Poorer grades sell at 12c to 15c, and find difficult sale at that. The best dairy pound rolls are selling at 17c. The demand for creamery is steady and it sells at 18c to 20c for solid and 21c to 21½ for prints.

Eggs—The mild weather results in liberal offerings. New laid and fresh gathered stocks are in good demand at 17c for the best and 14c to 16c for good.

Poultry—The demand for fresh-killed, young, dry-plucked stock is good. Turkeys came in very freely yesterday and prices fell off. Even at 10c per lb for choice young birds there were many left unsold, and the warm weather makes it dangerous to retain stock too long. Old birds sell at 9c per lb. Goose bring 5½c to 6c, ducks 65c to 75c, chickens 45c to 50c and live chickens 40c to 45c. Scalded chickens and thin stock bring 15c to 20c less than the others.

Gamo—The market is steady and the demand good at $1.25 per brace for canvas backs, 75c to $1 for black and mallard, 60c to 70c for redhead, 50c to 50c for pintail and bluebill, and 25c to 30c for butter ball, teal and other small ducks.

Baled Hay—The market is steady. Cars on the track here are quoted at $8.50 to $9.

Baled Straw—There is a fair inquiry and the market is steady. Cars on the track here are quoted at $5.50 to $6.

PROVISIONS.

The packers are without difficulty maintaining the prices of hog products, and are even filling their orders with difficulty, the demand being so strong. They do not contemplate any fall in prices yet for some time, although the new product bought cheaply will soon come on the market. Lard is in good demand and stocks are kept light.

Pork—Canada short cut, $21.50; heavy mess, $21.

Smoked and Dry Salted Meats—Long clear bacon, tons 11½c, cases 12c and small lots at 12½c; breakfast bacon, 15c to 16c; hams, 13½c to 14c; rolls 12c to 12½c; shoulders, 11½c; backs, 15c to 16c; green meats out of pickle are quoted at 1c less than smoked.

Lard—Tierces 11½c, tubs 12c and pails 12½c.

CATTLE MARKET.

Toronto, Oct. 29.—Trade was not very brisk to-day at the Toronto Cattle Market. Export cattle were even in poorer demand than during the earlier part of the week. There were far too many rough exporters offering, some of which had to be bought in for use again as short-keep feeders. There were practically no good choice animals offering, and prices took a drop of about 30c per cwt. Butchers' cattle were in fair demand and prices remained steady for the best offerings. Medium and common grades sold very slowly. Feeders showed no change. There is a good demand for everything of a good quality which offers. Still there are not enough heavy animals coming. Stockers were dull, the offerings being generally poor in quality. Lambs sold a trifle slowly, and prices declined about 10c per cwt. Sheep were steady and unchanged. Hogs were steady, although the run was heavy. There were 60 loads received, which included 853 cattle, 1,341 sheep, 120 calves and 1,314 hogs.

If the samples are found to be adulterated the Government will prosecute the offender. There is a great demand for Canadian honey in Great Britain, and large quantities are also shipped to the United States under a duty of 1-2-3 cents per lb. Not only has the Bee-Keepers' Association made exhibits, but through their influence several laws have been passed. One by the Dominion Government protects the industry by preventing people from adulterating honey. There was also a law passed by the Provincial Legislature to prevent the spread of foul breed amongst bees. An inspector has been appointed to visit the different apiaries in the province. An act was also passed to prevent fruit growers from spraying fruit trees in full bloom. Annual meetings are held for the mutual advancement of members. The next annual meeting will be held early in December, in Woodstock, where papers will be read on matters pertaining to apiculture. The Ontario and Dominion Governments have assisted the association in making the exhibit. Thanks are also due to Messrs. Evans, Armstrong, Emich, and Couse, who have willingly given their time and attention to make the exhibit a success.—Martha Craig.

MURDERER RICE.

Taken to Toronto from Kingston Heavily Shackled.

A despatch from Toronto says:—Fred Lee Rice, the only survivor of the desperado trio of Aurora, bank robbers, is again confined in Toronto jail. He was brought from Kingston on Thursday, and will be placed on trial at the Criminal Assizes this week on the charge of murdering Constable William Boyd.

Rice was brought from the penitentiary by County Constable John Brown and Sheriff's Officer Harris. They left Kingston at 12:33 p. m. on Thursday on the International Limited, and arrived in Toronto in the afternoon. The prisoner was handcuffed to both officers, and his legs were shackled together. He was driven from the station to the jail in a cab and lodged in a back cell, away from all other prisoners.

As at the time of the robbery trial, Rice was very neatly dressed. He weighs 10 or 15 pounds more than when he left Toronto, and is apparently in good spirits. He is under the impression that he cannot be tried on the murder charge until he has served 21 years for burglary, or has been pardoned on that charge.

The Criminal Assizes opened on Monday, with Chief Justice Falconbridge on the bench. Mr. Hugh Guthrie, K.C., of London will be Crown prosecutor. Rice will be defended by Mr. T. C. Robinette.

YUKON MINING.

Government Geologist Disappointed With Coleman.

A despatch from Ottawa says Mr. R. G. McConnell, of the Government Geological Survey, who just returned from the Yukon, he cannot accept the view of Coleman, of the School of Practical Science, Toronto, who returned a few weeks ago with the tale that the camp is playing out. Mr. McConnell says the Yukon will be a permanent country. It is placer mining will diminish in the vicinity of Dawson, but discoveries are being made further afield, a must not be forgotten that the Yukon Territory includes an extensive area. Mr. McConnell says quartz will succeed placer mining in the Dawson camp, and there is an enormous area of low-gravels to be worked. This recollection of water, a fact which presents the greatest difficulties, but necessity drives the miner from placer to hydraulic mining, water difficulty will be surmounted. Mr. McConnell says the war this year will not exceed that of last year; in fact it may prove to be somewhat smaller. Dawson rapidly becoming like an Eastern town.

STORMED A TOWN.

The British Troops Defeat Emir in Nigeria.

A despatch from London says:— Further details of the successful result of the expedition to Yola, in Northern Nigeria, are furnished by Reuter's correspondent, who writes under date September 21.

When the expedition under Colonel Morland reached within a mile of Yola, in which the Emir of Zaberu has his palace, a letter was sent to that ruler, who, however, refused to receive it. The letter was sent again and the Emir returned it unopened, threatening to attack the troops if they did not re-embark at once.

The force then formed up in three sides of a square. The Emir's warriors attacked, but they were repulsed with heavy loss, and retired into the town. The town was then entered, little opposition being met with until the neighborhood of the Emir's palace was reached.

The walls were strongly held by riflemen and bowmen. Two rifled field guns given to the Emir in 1893 by a French lieutenant were fired at thirty yards' range, taking off one man's leg and dangerously wounding several others. A heavy rifle and arrow fire was also poured into the advancing troops.

Colonel Morland was struck in the body by an arrow. The Hausa company rushed forward, and the guns were captured. The gate of the palace was then rushed, the enemy giving way in confusion, and retreating through a hole they had made in the rear wall of the compound. The Emir had escaped on horseback by this passage.

Besides the two French guns captured were 105 fused shells, 60 French rifles, over 1,500 cartridges, and about one ton of gunpowder.

The casualties were:—Colonel Morland and his staff officer, Major McClintock, slightly wounded; two men killed, six dangerously wounded, and twenty-three slightly. The enemy's loss amounted to 150 killed and wounded.

The Emir's palace was blown up with the captured gunpowder. Bobo Amadu, the Emir of Zaberu's brother, was installed as Emir of British Adamawa. All slave-raiding in this large province will now cease.

MRS. WHITE NOT GUILTY.

Jurors Refuse to Convict the Woman Prisoner.

A despatch from Brantford says:— After a deadlock had existed for over four hours among the jurors on the question of the guilt or innocence of Mrs. Josephine White, the conclusion of the majority that a verdict of not guilty should be returned was concurred in by the others, and that finding was presented to the Chief Justice at 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoon. The great crowd had waited patiently for the verdict throughout the day, and as the hours passed it was believed that the trial would have an abortive finding and that there would be no unanimous expression from the jury.

Mrs. White was not asked to bear the strain of waiting for the verdict under the eyes of the crowded court room, and spent the afternoon in her cell. When the fact that a verdict was to be returned was communicated to the jailer she was brought back to court. She was deathly pale as she entered the dock, but was much more composed than when the addresses of counsel were being delivered. During the few minutes' interval that had elapsed while the jurors were taking their seats she clutched the dock rail nervously, and when the foreman pronounced the words "not guilty" she leaned for-

DEATH OF MR. MASSEY.

The Head of the Massey-Harris Co. Passes Away.

A despatch from Toronto says:— Walter E. H. Massey, President of the Massey-Harris Company, died at his summer residence at Dentonia Farm on Monday afternoon. The family and all the near relatives who have been at the bedside for the past few days were present when the end came. For several days Mr. Massey has been hovering between life and death, but as late as Saturday the physicians had hopes for his recovery. A new complication set in on Sunday, and all chances for Mr. Massey living were given up.

THIRTY-SEVEN YEARS OLD.

The late Walter Edward Hart Massey was born on April 4th, 1881, in the village of Newcastle, Ontario, where his father, the late Mr. Hart A. Massey, was in business as a manufacturer of agricultural implements. When Mr. Massey was seven years old his parents removed from Canada to Cleveland, Ohio, where he was educated in the public schools of that city, and also in the Brooks Military academy, where, in addition to the usual branches of a liberal education, he received a thorough military training.

In 1882 the family moved to Toronto, Mr. H. A. Massey finding it necessary to give the Toronto factory his closer attention. Walter, who had a strong predilection for literature, scientific research and mechanical engineering, entered Boston University in 1883. He was, however not permitted to remain there very long, as his eldest brother, Mr. Charles A. Massey, the general manager of the company, died in 1884, necessitating his being called home to familiarize himself with the details of the business, in conjunction with his father and elder brother, Mr. C. D. Massey, he becoming at the same time a director and secretary and treasurer of the company.

A TOUR OF THE WORLD.

He made a tour of the world in 1887-8 in company with his younger brother, Frederic Victor, and during his trip he wrote a series of letters descriptive of his travels to the employees of the company, which were afterwards published.

In 1891 came the amalgamation of the Massey Manufacturing Company with A. Harris, Son & Co., Limited, Brantford, and Massey & Co., Limited, Winnipeg, into one organization, which is known to-day as Massey-Harris Co., Limited. Mr. Massey became one of its directors and its assistant general manager. On the death of the President, Mr. Hart A. Massey, in 1896, Mr. W. E. H. Massey was elected president of the company in his stead.

He was president of the Canada Cycle and Motor Company; first vice-president of the Toronto Board of Trade; president of the City Dairy Company, Limited, Toronto, and of the Verity Plow Co., Limited, Brantford; director and secretary-treasurer of Sawyer & Massey Company, Limited, Hamilton; and director of the following companies:—Bain Waggon Company, Limited, Woodstock, Ont.; National Trust Company, Limited, Toronto; The Carter-Crume Company, Limited, Toronto; director of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, and director and vice-president of the Insurance Agency Corporation.

He was extensively engaged in the importation and breeding of high-class Jersey, Guernsey and Ayrshire cattle, which he kept on "Dentonia Farm," his summer residence. Mr. Massey was director of the National Sanatorium Association, and a trustee of the Massey Music hall and Fred Victor Mission.

BULLER RELIEVED.

General French Will Succeed to His Command.

A despatch from London says:— The War Office announces that after consideration of all the circumstances of General Buller's speech on October 10, and the explanations thereof furnished by General Buller, he has been relieved of his command and placed on half pay.

The King has approved the appointment of General French to succeed Gen. Buller as commander of the First Army Corps, the appointment to become effective when Gen. French's services are no longer required in South Africa.

Pending the return of Gen. French Gen. Hildyard will assume the command.

The editorials in the papers here, with two or three exceptions, approve the War Office's action in dismissing Gen. Buller.

The following is an extract from Gen. Buller's speech regarding Ladysmith surrender, which resulted in his being relieved of his command:—

"I thought I knew that I had official information in writing that the Ladysmith garrison could not be fed beyond the end of the year. I was wrong. I have found out since."

"It was then the 15th December—the end of the year was 15 days off. The message I had to send to Sir George White was that I had made the attack, and that I had failed, and that I could not possibly make another attempt for a month, and then I was certain I could only do it by slow fighting, and not by rushing."

"I wrote a telegram out, and looked at it two or three times and said, 'It's a mean thing to send a telegram like that. He is a gallant fellow. He will sit still to the end.'"

"I was in command; whatever responsibility there was there was mine, and I thought 'Ought I not to give him some help, some lead, and something which, if it came to the last absolute moment, would have enabled him to say, 'Well, after all, I have Sir Redvers Buller's, as my commander, opinion in favor of this.'"

"Therefore I put into the middle of the telegram a sentence in which I suggested, if it would be necessary to abandon, to surrender, the garrison, and how he should do it."

"I put that in simply because, if he ever had to give up, it might be some sort of cover to a man who, I thought, was in much greater difficulty than I was myself."

CHAMBERLAIN SPEAKS.

Number of Members for Ireland to Be Reduced.

A despatch from Edinburgh says:— Mr. Chamberlain, the Colonial Secretary, addressing upwards of eight thousand persons in Waverley Market, Edinburgh, on Friday night announced that the Government intended to frame new rules for the House of Commons so as to limit Irish obstruction.

"We propose," said he, "to bring forward rules which shall give to the majority of the Commons greater control over its own business and greater control over the men who insult and outrage it, and we shall endeavor to protect the mother of Parliaments from those who would destroy her usefulness and reputation."

But this was not the only thing Mr. Chamberlain declared the Government intended to do.

"The present representation of Ireland is," said he, "an abuse and a scandal. No alteration can be made except in immediate anticipation of"

YUKON MINING.

Government Geologist Disagrees With Coleman.

despatch from Ottawa says:—R. G. McConnell, of the Government Geological Survey, who has returned from the Yukon, says not accept the view of Prof. J. H. Coleman, of the School of Practical Geology, Toronto, who returned a week ago with the tale that the Yukon is playing out. Mr. McConnell says the Yukon will be a mining country. It is true that mining will diminish in the future, but discoveries being made further afield, and it must not be forgotten that the Yukon territory includes an extensive area of low-grade ore. Mr. McConnell says that the Yukon will succeed placer mining in the future, and there is yet an enormous area of low-grade ore to be worked. This requires the use of water, a fact which presents the greatest difficulties, but when it drives the miner from the surface to hydraulic mining, the difficulty will be surmounted. McConnell says the wash-up of the Yukon will not exceed that of the Colorado; in fact it may prove to be much smaller. Dawson is becoming like an Eastern position during the jury.

Mrs. White was not asked to bear the strain of waiting for the verdict under the eyes of the crowded court room, and spent the afternoon in her cell. When the fact that a verdict was to be returned was communicated to the jailer she was brought back to court. She was deathly pale as she entered the dock, but was much more composed than when the addresses of counsel were being delivered. During the few minutes' interval that had elapsed while the jurors were taking their seats she clutched the dock rail nervously, and when the foreman pronounced the words "not guilty" she leaned forward and caught the hand of her son.

The verdict was received in silence, broken only by the hysterical sobbing of the prisoner's women friends, and there was no demonstration from the body of the court room. Mr. L. F. Heyd then moved for her discharge from custody, the motion being unopposed by the Crown prosecutor. As she left the dock the prisoner embraced her sons and brother and wrung the hand of the counsel who had made so splendid a fight on her behalf. Then the strain being over she fainted and later in the day was utterly prostrated.

TREES THRIVING.

Experiment in Planting on Sable Island.

A despatch from Ottawa says:—During May last, it will be remembered that Dr. Saunders, Director of Experimental Farms, and Colonel Gourdeau, Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, visited Sable Island, "the graveyard of the Atlantic," and planted several thousand forest trees and shrubs, the idea being that if these trees and plants lived and thrived, they would have the effect of binding the soil of the island together, prevent that change in the conformation of the island which has been so puzzling to mariners of late years, and at the same time make the island more conspicuous to vessels. The officials were not able to plant out the whole of the 81,000 trees and shrubs which they took over to Sable Island, but Mr. Boutilier, the superintendent of the light service, and his men were instructed how to do the work to the best advantage.

Reports received at the Department of Marine recently indicate that the young trees, with the exception of the pines, are doing very well. In a few years it is felt this experiment will have made quite a change in the appearance of the island.

A BENEFIT TO BRITAIN.

London Spectator's View of Abrogation of Treaty.

A despatch from London says:—The Spectator, dealing with the question of the Isthmian Canal, says:—"When the canal is made by the United States, opened to the world on equal terms, and held so strongly that no power at war with Great Britain will be able to violate its neutrality, the British nation will realize that, instead of the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty proving an injury, it is a great benefit to the nation."

"That America, though she will make, work, and hold the canal, should bind herself to preserve its neutrality as regards a power with which she might be at war, is absurd. Such a stipulation would not, and could not, be observed ten minutes after war was declared. The American Isthmian Canal, like everything else American, will be used against America's enemies in case of war, whatever injuries may say. We should do the same in case of the 'Suez Canal'."

ONTARIO FRUIT EXHIBIT.

Splendid Showing Made at the Pan-American.

The Ontario fruit and wine exhibitors have won great success at the Pan-American. A recompense has been obtained for every exhibit put up, as well as a silver medal for the installation, which, owing to the good taste and energy of Mr. Bunting, Mr. Thompson and Mr. Collins, has not only been artistically arranged, but the standard has been kept up throughout the entire season. The preliminary list of awards are as follows:—

Gold medal, display of wines, Department of Agriculture, Toronto, Ontario; Silver medal, installation of exhibit, Department of Agriculture, Toronto; General display of domestic canned fruits and vegetables, Department of Agriculture, Toronto; pickles and relishes, Shuttleworth & Harris, Brantford, Ont.; Bronze medal, wines, George Barnes, St. Catharines, Ont.; wines, Girardot Wine Co., Sandwich, Ontario; J. S. Hamilton & Co., Brantford, Ont.; honorable mention, canned vegetables, L. M. Schenck & Co., St. Catharines, Ont.; Spring Bank mineral water, A. J. Baine, St. Catharines, Ont.

This week the tables are loaded down by a magnificent display of fruits. There are ninety-seven varieties of grapes, 118 varieties of apples, 51 varieties of pears, 57 varieties of peaches, a fine collection of tomatoes, English walnuts, black walnuts, hickory nuts, and a second crop of figs. It has been frequently stated by those who have seen both that the Ontario fruit exhibit at Buffalo is far superior to that of Chicago. Mr. Bunting and his assistants may be congratulated on their success.—Martha Craig.

POPE'S DEATH IS NEAR.

Life Preserved Solely by Physician's Care of Him.

A despatch from Rome says:—The Vatican officials are offended by an article that appeared in the Paris Leclair, which declared that a coadjutor to the Pope was necessary owing to the decrepitude of the Pope, which places him absolutely under the influence of Cardinal Rampolla, the Papal Secretary of State. Nevertheless, it is rumored that the Pope will never again be able to perform any independent act, and that his life is preserved solely by Dr. Lapponi's extraordinary care of him. It is said that his Holiness is subject to continual fainting fits.

DAWSON'S GOLD EXPORT.

Twenty-One Millions Shipped East in Four Months.

A despatch from Seattle, Wash., says:—The official records at the Gold Commissioner's office at Dawson, where expert certificates for all gold going from the country must be obtained, show that the gold shipments from Dawson for September amounted to $3,000,000. This brings the total for the last four months to $21,640,000.

"We propose," said he, "to bring forward rules which shall give to the majority of the Commons greater control over its own business and greater control over the men who insult and outrage it, and we shall endeavor to protect the mother of Parliaments from those who would destroy her usefulness and reputation."

But this was not the only thing Mr. Chamberlain declared the Government intended to do.

"The present representation of Ireland is," said he, "an abuse and a scandal. No alteration can be made except in immediate anticipation of a general dissolution, and we are not contemplating that. But when we get nearer to the time, we shall ask you whether you think Irish representation is so precious to you, is so valuable to the national interests, that it is desirable to continue on a scale which gives the Irish a representation enormously exceeding the proportionate representation of Scotland and England."

The Colonial Secretary went on to point out that on the basis of population Ireland had thirty members too many in the House of Commons, and on the basis of her contributions for Imperial purposes, as considered at the time of the union, she had from 40 to 50 members too many.

"I say that this constitutes an abuse," he continued, "and there is no reason why it should be perpetuated."

In another portion of the speech, which was largely devoted to the Irish question, he observed:—"If these gentlemen who now openly shout for the Mahdi and pray for the Boers had a Parliament of their own, if all the strings of the Irish Government had been in their hands, and they had had the power, I am certain that they would have refused to pay their contribution to the war, and that they would have placed us in a position of embarrassment."

CONCENTRATION CAMPS.

Proposed Concentrated Action by the Several Powers.

A despatch from Paris says:—M. Georges Perry will shortly propose in the Chamber of Deputies a resolution declaring that "the Chamber calls upon the Government to consider in concert with other nations the adoption of practical means to obtain from Great Britain the removal of the women and children and old men from the concentration camps in South Africa to salubrious, neutralized territories."

M. Delcasse, the French Foreign Minister, had a conference to-day with M. Georges Berry regarding his proposed motion. Motions similar to M. Berry's will be submitted to the Belgian and German Parliaments.

THE Picton Gazette of Tuesday takes the Mabee pamphlet very much to heart. Still, we suppose it's to their interest to do so.

SOME thirteen constituencies are at present without representation in the House of Commons, and in due time the writs for new elections will be issued. This seems to promise a stirring prelude to the meeting of parliament.

A MR. C. R. MABEE, who claims to be a life-long Conservative, and whom the Mail and Empire says is a Yankee, is out with a book, entitled "Our Progress." Let Mr. Mabee be what he may, the statements published are either true or false. If the facts are not as stated, it should be easy to refute them. The elector should certainly want to be acquainted with the facts. There are many extracts in the book. Take this one from the Toronto Telegram:—

"Ontario is not to be won for Mr. Whitney by 'hurray-boys' speeches to the effect that the Conservatives never failed to carry Ontario when they were united. Such talk is historically inaccurate and has the mischievous effect of stimulating that evil spirit of 'yellow dog' partisanship which imagines that the party is bigger than the country. Again and again the Conservatives united under Sir John Macdonald to beat Oliver Mowat. They were routed horse, foot and artillery. They carried the Province in Federal contests with the help of a gerrymander. The political history of Ontario indicates that this Province is not the chattel of any party. The Conservatives must get votes outside their own party if they hope to defeat the Ross Government, and the empty glorification of party for the sake of party gives the judicious cause to grieve."

PAN-AMERICAN DAIRY NOTES.

The Model Dairy is now going along on the lines that were laid down when the warm weather came to an end. The Jerseys and Holsteins are making the best showing, more especially as they are holding well together, while the Guernseys are week after week dropping more and more apart. They are now holding fourth place with the French Canadians in fairly good fifth, and that with one miniature cow that has never earned or eaten nearly as much as the average of the herd. When they were brought into the dairy they were a new element in the list and were considered much of a curiosity, but they have very well established their claim to good dairy qualities. They are, of course, something of a northern animal and suffered more from the midsummer heat than some others did, as did also the Ayrshires, which had not all been imported long enough to become fully acclimated. It is probable that the Canadian Shorthorns will make up a total that is larger in proportion to the others than was expected. The standing of the herds for the week ending October 15th is as follows:—Jerseys $7.69, Holsteins $7.31, Ayrshires $7.02, Guernseys $6.83, French Canadians $6.01, Red Polls $5.75, Polled Jerseys $5.39, Shorthorns $5.38, Brown Swiss $5.18, Dutch Belted $4.01.

The Work is Now Easily and Well Done by DIAMOND DYES.

The perfect coloring of all cotton and mixed cotton and wool rags for the making up of mats, rugs and carpets, is easily accomplished when the Diamond Dye Cotton colors are used. These scientifically prepared cotton colors are the only unfading cotton dyes now before the ladies of Canada. They are fast to sunlight and washing. They produce the most lovely and brilliant shades, and so simple to use that a child may dye successfully with them.

If you are a lover of homemade mats and rugs, collect your cotton rags, send to the Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, Montreal, for pattern sheet of "Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns," which will enable you to choose your own designs of any required size. When you have selected your designs, use the Diamond Dyes to color your rags as per shades on mat or rug pattern. Pattern sheets mailed free to any address.

Explains His Own Killing.

In Ireland the peasantry still believe the word "killed" in its original sense, conveying the idea of serious injury rather than death. Thus the frequenters of Irish courts will often hear a witness swear in assault cases that he was "kilt entirely." An amusing instance in which the word was used in that sense appears in a report of a case recently tried in Sligo. An old man,

TALKED ABOUT THE JUL

'Who's the Old Woman With the Red Curtains Round Her.

There was a very good story I retold, but which is actually a story of those days. A Judge was in a case where the accused could understand only the Celtic language so an interpreter had to be employed. The official interpreter was a good fellow, whose wish was to do justice, but he certainly had leanings toward defendant.

The accused man was holding long conversation with the interpreter and that worthy did not translate speech to the court. At last the judge demanded to know what had passed.

"Nothing, my lord," was the interpreter's unblushing reply.

"How dare you say that when I heard you talking to him. Come what was it?"

"My lord, it had nothing to do with the case."

"If you do not tell me what he said I'll commit you for contempt."

"Well, my lord, you'll excuse me but he said, 'Who's that old woman with the red bed curtains round sitting up there?'"

Every one in court laughed, and the tip-staff did not, for a moment, stop the unseemly conduct. The judge in his red robes and white wig, until his face was brighter than the red robes and asked:

"And what did you say?"

"I said 'Whist ye spalpeen!'"

Ontario indicates that this Province is not the chattel of any party. The Conservatives must get votes outside their own party if they hope to defeat the Ross Government, and the empty glorification of party for the sake of party gives the judicious cause to grieve."

Does it ever occur to the mind of the farmer that there must be a reason for the enhanced price of his products, and does he ever try to find out just what has caused a boom in his favor? Firstly, the old country has been for many years a very large purchaser of food products of all kinds. Our neighbors over the line found this out many years ago, and profited accordingly. So sure of the market in the course of years did our neighbors become that they taxed British goods unmercifully, arguing that reprisal was out of the question, as the British must have food. When things were about as good as they could be for our neighbors, the Diamond Jubilee came along and the first appearance of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in England also took place. From that time until now there has been a tendency in the Old Country to patronize Canada if at all possible, hence our great increase in exports of food stuffs to all the ports of Great Britain. To still further increase the Canadian trade inducements were offered the various steamship companies to instal cold storage plants on their vessels and in many instances this has been done, and is still being done. The loyalty shown by this country in the South African war has attracted still greater attention, and lastly the great reception given the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York, has left little to be desired in the matter of making it patent to the world that Canada is a progressive country. The market in Great Britain for all that Canada can produce is practically unlimited. With our present population the food stuffs required could not be produced here.

It is pleasant to note that the fourth plank in the platform of the Ross Government is: "The extension of our trade with Great Britain in all natural products, but especially in horses, cattle and dressed meats."

Wilton reported in the afternoon. The society at Wesley is the only one on the district which was not represented at the convention. Strathcona and Wilton are new societies organized during the past convention year, and no society has disbanded during the year, so there is an increase of two societies and a slight increase in membership over the previous year. Bath, Bay and Yarker circuits have no societies on any of the appointments, but there are likely to be some organized during the coming year. The election of the Business Committee resulted as follows:—Rev. Dr. McDiarmid, Rev. J. E. Moore, Miss Maud Garrison, Mr. F. L. Hooper and Mr. G. E. Deroche.

At the afternoon session instead of essays and addresses, as is usual in such conventions, the Christian Endeavor department, under its vice-president, Miss Georgia Watts; the Missionary department, under its vice-president, Miss L. Edwards, and the Literary department, under its vice-president, Mr. J. M. Denyes, were considered in turn, in the nature of a school, there being an interchange of ideas from the various leagues represented, as to what is being done or what might be done, in either of these departments. At the close of the afternoon session the Business Committee reported the following officers for the ensuing year:—President, F. L. Hooper, Napanee; 1st Vice-President, Miss Georgia Watts, Odessa; 2nd Vice-President, G. E. Deroche, Deseronto; 3rd Vice-President, J. M. Denyes, Newburgh; 4th Vice-President, Miss Edith Sharp, Morven; 5th Vice-President, Mrs. Gibbard, Napanee; Secretary, Mrs. D. B. Wilson, Napanee; Treasurer, R. Price, Wesley, (P. O. Newburgh); Executive Committee—Miss Williams, Camden East; William Shaver, Selby; Mrs. Lapum, Wilton; Mr. Hough, Sillsville; Miss Mallet, Hayburn.

At the evening session the retiring president, G. E. Deroche, introduced the president-elect, F. L. Hooper, who took charge of the convention. J. M. Denyes, Newburgh, and Rev. C. E. Day, Wilton, gave very interesting reports on the Summer School held in Toronto in August last. This school was for the study of the bible and the study of missions, interspersed with afternoon outings in various parts of the city. It continued for eight days and was evidently a great source of inspiration to those who were able to be present. Prof. McLaughlin, of Victoria University, who conducted the Bible study for an hour each morning, which is said to be one of the most helpful things of the school, has consented to conduct a Bible study for an hour each of the two mornings on which the Conference Epworth League convention is to be held in Deseronto in February next. The convention closed with a stirring address by Rev. J. Shearer, on "The Battle For the Sabbath."

An amusing instance in which the word was used in that sense appears in a report of a case recently tried in Sligo. An old man, who had been assaulted, was being examined by a young and inexperienced barrister, who was conducting the prosecution. "And were you stunned when you were knocked down?" he asked. "Was I what, yere honor?" asked the witness. "Stunned," repeated the barrister. "Shure, I don't know what yez mane, sor." "Were you rendered insensible?" "Shure, what's insensible, at all, at all?" the witness asked, his face showing clearly that he was perplexed. "I'm afraid I cannot get any good of this stupid witness, my lord," said the counsel. "Let me try him," said the Judge. "Come, my good man, did they kill you now?" The face of the witness brightened up and he exclaimed: "Faix, that they did entirely, me lord."

Pity and Beauty

The most beautiful thing in the world is the baby, all dimples and joy. The most pitiful thing is that same baby, thin and in pain. And the mother does not know that a little fat makes all the difference.

Dimples and joy have gone, and left hollows and fear; the fat, that was comfort and color and curve—all but pity and love—is gone.

The little one gets no fat from her food. There is something wrong; it is either her food or food-mill. She has had no fat for weeks; is living on what she had stored in that plump little body of hers; and that is gone. She is starving for fat; it is death, be quick!

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the fat she can take; it will save her.

The genuine has this picture on it, take no other. If you have not tried it, send for free sample, its agreeable taste will surprise you.

Schoolboy Humor.

Not the Less Sidesplitting From the Fact
That it is Unconscious.

TO the majority of people, perhaps, a schoolmaster's life appears monotonous and uneventful, remarks "Chambers' Journal," but to one who is apt to look upon the humorous side of things this is far from being the fact. Most boys are careless, irresponsible creatures, certainly; but there is a fund of genuine, unadulterated humor in the average boy. A schoolmaster of fifteen years' standing writes: "I have corrected, I might say, a few thousand examination papers in my time. Some of the answers to questions set are wonderfully funny and original—unconsciously funny." The following are specimens:

A boy, aged ten, thus answers a question as to the cause of the Transvaal disturbances: "Krugger and Kannerbulism is one. He is a man of blud.
Mr. Chamberling has wrote to him sayin' come out and fite or else give up the blud of the English you have took.
he is a boardutchman and wickid hee-thin. lord Kitchener has sent for his goary blud and to bring back his scan-derous hed ded or alive."

An essay on Gladstone by a boy of eleven states: "Mr. Gladstone lov'd everybody, he lov'd publicans and cin-ners and Irishmen. he wanted the Irish to come to England and have home rool, but Mr. Chamberlin says, no, no. so alars he got his blud up and kild Mr. Parnel. Mr. Gladstone died with great rispct and is buried in Westminster with pieceful ashes."

Rather ambiguous is this description of Queen Elizabeth by another boy:
"Queen-Elizabeth 'was a vargin queen and she was never marri'd. she was so fond of dresses that she was never seen without one on. she was beautef-full and clever with a red hed and freckles."

The boy writer of the following is decidedly backward in his Tennyson.
Concerning the late poet laureate he writes: "Tennyson wrote butefull poems with long hair and studd so much that he sed mother will you call me airly dear? his most graistist poem is called the idle king, he was made a lord but he was a good man and wrote many hoads, he luv'd our dear Queen so much that he made a poem to her called the fairy Queen."

Another boy wishes to become an editor. In an essay on "The Choice of a Profession," he gives his reasons in these words: "A editur is always a happy man because he can read luvly tales and artikels all day and pages of sweet luv poems. A good editur has branes, but it must be very sad for him having to read melankolle, stories of luv so as to make him all-most weep with tears from his eyes.
a editur is a rich man because he never pays for artikels and so has all this interlect for nothing."

One could hardly put the following ideas of a certain youth on "Honesty" to a practical use: "It is a nobel thing to be a honist man. If you are a hon-ist man you can look the world in its face and never be ashamed of the devil. it is good to be honist when sum one is looking becaws you may get a reeward. I know a churchwarding who is a honist man who collects money on Sunday in his black clothes. If you are honist when you are young you may grow to be rich and the lord mare and then of caws it dusn't matter."

This is from an essay on "My Hero:"
"My hero is my father because he is a Christyoun clergyman. my father says o my son gro up like your father and rpect yourself because nobody else will rpect you. I am goin' to be a clergyman because my father says I am a ass in school and have no branes to get a livin' in bizniss."

Shakespeare is hardly appreciated by the young hopeful who writes:—
"Shakespeare was a famus poet and necabus, he wrote luvly plays called

Shakespeare is hardly appreciated by the young hopeful who writes:—
 "Shakespeare was a famus polt and poachur. he wrote luvly plaze called the tame shrew, hambiet and a scotch piece called Macdoogul. In Shakespeares time some of the plaze were very rude but now everything is so polite that a innercent father can take his baby and it wont disgust it. Shakespeare was so ill when he died that he cried out oh my cursid bones."

One youth, who is a poet in embryo, is a great admirer of Longfellow. "Longfellow," he says, "wrote a grate poem called 'The brik.' he butefully poemises in this way—I stood on a brik at midnight and gazed at the clock for an hour."

A boy, mourning the loss of an uncle, writes the following letter to his master: "Dear Reverend Sir, I am enjoy- ing my holidays and have only been ill twice. my unkel died with being off in three days last week, and we have had a pleasant fewneral. I want to work in my arithmetic sir as you said but it would be wicked if I did it with a ded unkel, my father says if I dont get a prize next term sumthing will happen—I am Your respectabl pupil

New Stories Are Scarce.

Tim Murphy, the actor, and Henry Watterson, the editor, met in the cor- ridor of a Washington hotel the other day.

"What is your latest story?" the actor asked.

"No such thing as a new story now," growled Watterson. "It is impossible to keep a story good for two days. What's the use of thinking up new stories when they get spread all over the coun- try between daylight and dawn? Why, sir, do you know that it is impossible to keep a good story as your own prop- erty. It's these blank telegraph oper- ators who like good stories better than anybody. Suppose Chauncey Depeu has a good story in New York. He tells it. Some telegraph operator hears it, and that night when things are quiet on the wire he asks the fellow at San Francisco or Denver or Timbuctoo if he has heard the latest, and then he ticks it off. Every man along the line hears it and ticks it off to the fellow he is working with, and by daylight the new story is the property of the wide, wide world. New story? Fough!"

"William," said the lady of the house, "will you mail these invitations for me the first thing this morning?"
 "Going to give a party?" "I have en- gaged a new kitchen girl for the first of next week, and I thought I would show her that we start with no ill- feeling by giving a pink tea for her Monday afternoon." — Indianapolis "News."

A HELPLESS MAN.

A man is certainly in a helpless condi- tion when he has to sit with his leg on a chair for weeks, unable to move. William Grimshaw, Wolfe Island, Front- enac County, Ont., was in this plight. Doctors could do nothing for him and the pain remained in his legs for six months. Three bottles of Dr. Hall's Rheumatic Cure and three boxes of Climax Iron Tonic Pills routed the dis- ease and restored him to perfect health. He now recommends it to all sufferers. This great blood purifier is put up in bottles containing ten days treatment. Price 50 cents at all drug stores or The Dr. Hall Medicine Co., Kingston, Ont.

On Monday, at Deseronto, while Capt. Skillen, of the Str. Deseronto, had blown the whistle, preparatory to starting on his trip up the bay, one of the passengers, who had gone down from Adolphustown, and who was still on the dock, in the person of Charles Losse, dropped dead. Deceased at one time was a resident of Picton, being employed by Mr. Soby as porter at the Royal Hotel.

the boat. Was Paul alone in the last extremity? Hear the shout of the last searred missionary as he cries out, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand." Was John Wesley alone in the last extremity? No. Hear him say, "Best of all, God is with us." Was Sir William Forbes alone in the last extremity? No. Hear him say to his friends, "Tell all the people who are coming down to the bed of death from my experience it has no terrors." Oh, say a great many people, that does very well for distinguished Christians; but for me, a common man, for me, a common woman, we can't expect that guidance and help.—T. De Witt Talmage.

Note the Passage of Time.

Have dogs an almanac? That is a question that has "exercised" the minds of their loving observers. That they always know Sunday is certain. Where Sunday is a bad day for the dogs, read them a prayer book and send them mournfully to their beds. But many dogs need no book for a token. They rise in low spirits on the day of rest, drooping melancholy tails and ears and lips. Someone says: "Oh, yes; we know that dogs are creatures of habit. The seventh day comes regularly around. They feel the flight of time." But this theory does not cover all the facts of the case. The dogs that belong to families keeping saints' days (which don't occur with the regularity of the Sabbath) are equally aware that the festivals of their masters are no red letter days for them. "Of course, it is the Sunday go-to-meeting hats and bonnets!" explained a cocksure junior some time ago. But it is not this! Neither is it the church bells ringing, as someone else suggested. For at a French watering place or a villa out of the reach of sounds of bell ringing, where the family had no peculiar livery for Sunday—not smarter coats, tall hats or feminine finery—and where even the books were not carried in the hand, being locked up in receptacles in the church, the dogs got up limp and dejected on Sundays and on holidays, too, and stayed in the same depressed condition until the hours for going to church were past and going out again meant starting up a nice, doggie walk!

Is it not for Maggie Tulliver, who has been "crossed in love," that someone tenders a recipe likely to cure her in the words: "Give the girl a pup?" It is offered to the reader as an unconsciously humorous suggestion. Many accept it in this sense and laugh at it. But that is their mistake, I venture to think.—London Mail.

Rheumatism

No other disease makes one feel so old. It stiffens the joints, produces lameness, and makes every motion painful. It is sometimes so bad as wholly to disable, and it should never be neglected. M. J. McDonald, Trenton, Ont., had it after a severe attack of the grip; Mrs. Hattie Turner, Bolivar, Mo., had it so severely she could not lift anything and could scarcely get up or down stairs; W. H. Shepard, Sandy Hook, Conn., was laid up with it, was cold even in July, and could not dress himself.

SHILOH, ONT., OF RHEUMATISM AND SCIATICA.

It Matters Not How Serious Your Troubles Are, The Great Compound Will Permanently

Cure You.

Autumn months bring rapid weather changes disastrous to all who suffer from rheumatism. Pains and tortures increase seven-fold, and death reaps his harvest from the ranks of rheumatics at this season.

If you are a sufferer from any form of rheumatism, cast aside the medicines that you have too long experimented with and test the virtues of Paine's Celery Compound, the great specific for rheumatism that has worked such marvellous cures in all parts of our Dominion. Mr. Beechinor permanently cured after five years of suffering, urges the afflicted to use the remedy that saved his life. He says:

"For five years I suffered from sciatica and rheumatism, at times being so bad that I could not walk or put my hand to my mouth. If I attempted to do any work I would be crippled for weeks. I took medical treatment, patent medicines, Turkish and mineral baths, but all failed to meet my case. I tried Paine's Celery Compound, and after using six bottles I feel like a new man, and can do a hard day's work and feel none the worse for it. I have also gained in weight, and can truly say I am permanently cured."

HOUSEHOLD.

CHAPTER XIV.

The sound that has startled Varley and Mrs. Dundas out of their love-trance, had come from a source little dreamed of by them. As they hurried towards the house, the veil of evergreens behind where they had stood was lightly thrust aside, and the moonbeams revealed the pale, startled face of Constantia McGillicuddy.

She looked so white, so horrified, that Stronge, who was with her, thought she was going to faint. She had witnessed that last scene—the wild embrace, the swift and guilty separation. It had been a sudden awakening, a first glimpse into the hateful side of life, its lawlessness, its vile treachery.

It had all happened in a moment, and when Stronge had realized the meaning of the picture before him, it was too late to prevent Constantia's reliving it. She looked straight at him now with a very anguish of distress in her eyes, and tried to say something, but could not. There was a touch of shame about her, that made him wretched. If he could only have looked back at her with a glance sufficiently unconscious as to convince her that he had seen nothing, and that she was alone in her knowledge of the odious discovery she had just made, he felt matters would be easier for her. But he could not do it. Her clear eyes read him through and through.

A sense of savage anger rose within him, that she should have been subjected to such an ordeal; that her pure, strong, childish nature should have been thus roughly roused to a knowledge better left unlearned. It was a thoroughly unfortunate affair altogether, but there was at least a little grain of comfort to him in the thought, that if she was to witness such a disgraceful thing, he should have been her companion.

"Yes, I saw all," he said, involuntarily making answer to the unspoken question in her frightened eyes.

"Oh, it is horrible!" said Constantia with a violent shudder. "Oh! how can it be true? And Lady Varley—"

"Come and sit down here," said Stronge, drawing her towards a garden chair. He could see that she was trembling. "And do not think so much of it. I am sorry from my soul that you should have been here, but—"

"What does it matter about me?" cried she impatiently. "Do not think of me at all. Think of Lady Varley. Oh, poor thing! And her little baby so ill. His baby, too, and he—"

"Is the child ill?" "It is always ailing, and now it is worse. It is dying, I think, but she will not believe it. But you will see how unhappy she must be, and now this. If it should come to her ears, if— Oh!" cried she, clasping her hands, "if I were a man I should like to kill him."

Her face was deadly pale in the moonlight; her lips quivering. Stronge felt the blood grow warm about his heart. He asked himself at this moment whether it were not his duty, to obey even her vaguest wish. Why not throw Lord Varley's falseness in his teeth, and—

"As for her," said Constantia in a low tone, between the teeth—she was looking straight before her, she moment later he had roused himself, and was coming towards her.

"Our dance, I think," he said, coldly.

She started. Had so much time flown? Had she indeed missed one of the dances she most desired?

"You had forgotten," went on Featherston, quite stiffly now. It is abominable to a man to find himself forgotten even for an instant by the woman who, he believes, loves him. "It hardly matters now," he said. "It is almost at an end."

Constantia grew pale. That first glance at the gay, smiling Donna had unnerved her; and now his coldness gave a finishing touch to the suppressed agitation that was troubling her.

"It was not that I forgot," she said, "only— She hesitated. How could she go on? How explain?

"Only. Quite so," responded he, with a half-veiled sneer, and a glance at Stronge, who was not heeding him, but was rather regarding Mrs. Dundas with an amazed scrutiny. Had the woman no conscience—no heart? Here she was laughing, glowing, in all the insolence of her beauty, unmindful of that late scene in the garden that had crushed Constantia. She was making herself adorable to half a dozen admirers; notably to Coronis. She had even condescended to go farther afield, and had drawn young McGillicuddy into her net. The boy was leaning over her in an attitude of exaggerated devotion.

Barry, however, held aloof from the siren of the hour. His manner did not exactly convey the idea that he was against her, but he certainly was not on her side. Constantia noted this, and was in a manner glad of it, though an instant later even this comfort forsook her; Barry, seeing her, turned upon her a scowling brow, and a glance full of concentrated wrath and reproach. It was a momentary gleam; it disappeared again as he went back to his conversation with Mrs. Ronayne-Power, a little woman with sharp, refined features, and a reputation of saying such nasty things of her neighbors, that she was immensely pelted by them in consequence.

Not a bit of it," she was saying now, in her clear, staccato voice that always made itself heard, a propos of the latest married scandal in the country. "There was no hurry about it. She was never in a hurry, if you remember. It appears that as far back as last January, she had all her arrangements made for the elopement with the major, even to the giving away of her old things. She had had an entirely new trousseau ordered for him, though the first was only three years old. However, at the last moment, her husband, as you know, got the smallpox."

"Anything so considerate!" murmured Donna.

"Inconsiderate, she thought it, as she had a trumpy sort of a conscience somewhere. She was good-natured, always, and she made up her mind to give him a final spell of nursing before deserting him forever; she therefore told Major Blackwood she could not possibly start on her honeymoon with him, until she had seen the old man safely through his illness."

"And the major, of course, very wisely declined to go a-honey-moon-

"I saw her, too," cried Barry, laughing: "when you spoke of bones I remembered. She was the woman 'mit nodings on' who danced all night with Petersham, and who—" "Sh! No! Put your head in a bag," whispered the pretty woman, nudging him cautiously: "that was Mrs. Burke, cousin of Featherston's. You'll let yourself in for something if you don't look out."

"In spite of the bones, the major was faithful," went on Mrs. Ronayne-Power, with a view to crushing Featherston's view of the scandal.

"There is nothing like constancy," said George McGillicuddy, with a fond glance at Donna.

"Nothing, indeed. It is the rarest virtue we have," agreed Featherston directing a withering one at Constantia, who met it and replied to it silently but eloquently. Her large eyes filled with tears.

"Well, I guess I must be going," said the pretty woman, rising to her feet. She had a lovely figure, so she rose slowly. "My old Dragon is disgracefully lively to-night, so I must be on the move. I had hoped the lobster mayonnaise and the dry Monopole would have been too much for him, but he has survived all, and is now considerably on the champ. Good-night, good folks. Better luck next time for me, at all events."

"I say! Don't go yet," said Mrs. Ronayne-Power persuasively. She knew there would be a row if the pretty woman stayed, so she did her best to keep her.

"Tisn't good enough!" said the pretty woman, with a faint laugh. "Last time I tried that on, the consequences were gruesome. I dare say," carelessly, "you all remember. I flatly refused to move upon the homeward track, whereupon that dear old thing whose name I bear, hauled me off my seat before an appreciative audience! To risk it again would mean murder."

"Oh, he wouldn't go so far as that!" said Mrs. Ronayne-Power, reassuredly.

"No, but I should. As it is," with a languid smile, "I expect he has hauled me off my seat for good and all. I shan't resume it." She nodded briskly all round, and, escorted by a man on her left, strolled out of sight.

Donna looked after her with an inscrutable smile upon her lips. "What a fool that woman was! Could she not manage her little affairs with more decency than that! Cajolery! Had she no knowledge of the unlimited power of that great agent?"

She, too, rose.

"This dance is now almost at an end," she said, "so I presume I may in safety return to the ball-room. I was engaged for it to some half-dozen or so, so thought it wise to go into retirement until it blew over. Mr. Berry, you will give me your arm?"

She smiled winningly upon him. She preferred Barry at this moment to any other man, because she could see he did not prefer her in any way.

Featherston, as if nettled, turned aside. He had approached her by a foot or so, as if to speak, but now he drew back. He went up to Constantia instead. It seemed to him on the instant that the innocent, unsophisticated girl was infinitely the more desirable of the two.

"As we missed that last dance," he said, with a friendly smile, "I hope you will give me this instead. It is only a square dance, indeed; but still half a loaf, you know, is better—sometimes—than no bread."

Constantia crimsoned and then grew pale. She clasped her hands nervously.

"I am so sorry," she stammered; "but—I have promised it to—"

"I see," interrupted he coldly. "You are determined then to dance

ROLLS, GEMS AND MUFFINS

Farker House Rolls.—One tin yeast, 1 tablespoon sugar, a pound the size of an egg, 1 pt and flour enough to make a batter. Put the milk on the to scald, with the lard in it, the salt, sugar and yeast into flour. Add the milk, being careful not to put it in too hot. Knead thoroughly when mixed at room temperature and only slightly the next morning. Roll out an inch thick, and cut with a large-sized biscuit cutter. Spread a little butter on each and lap together. Let them rise very light, then bake in a oven.

Buttermilk Rolls.—Take two cups buttermilk, and stir into 1 teaspoon saleratus dissolved in little hot water, and stir into about 5 cups flour; beat this mixture up lightly, and bake in F rolls pans.

Tea Rolls.—Scald 1 pt milk, 1 tablespoon of sugar, 1 cup yeast and flour to make a stiff batter. Let this rise over night. The morning add 1 cup of buttermilk, 1 teaspoon of salt and the white of 2 well-beaten eggs. Mix stiff, knead well and let rise. Then knead and roll three-fourths of an inch thick. Cut with a biscuit cutter one-half and roll the half over it. Let rise until light, then bake.

Spiced Rolls.—Take a piece of your bread dough and roll it half an inch thick; brush the with melted butter, and cover with cinnamon and fine white sugar. Commence at one side and roll it jelly cake, then cut it an inch thick and lay in a pan as biscuit, together, and let them rise, bake 20 minutes.

Gems.—One pint sweet milk, flour 1 tablespoon sugar and 1 shortening, salt, 3 teaspoons baking powder. Grease the pans, and very hot; then put in the dough and bake for 20 minutes. If you bake more than you want for single meal, steam the remainder the next, as they are delicious treated in this way.

Graham Gems.—One pint of milk, 1 teaspoon each of soda, salt, 1 heaping tablespoon of sugar, 1 cup white flour, and sufficient Graham flour to make stiff batter. Mix thoroughly, bake in well greased gem tins quick oven about 20 minutes.

Buttermilk Gems.—One egg, 1 handful of sugar, a pinch of salt, 1 cup melted butter, 1 pt buttermilk and 1 teaspoon soda, and mix stiff. Have gem tins hot and good oven.

Muffins.—One egg, 1 cup buttermilk mixed, melted and poured 1 pt sweet milk, 3 teaspoons baking powder sifted. Beat it hard, bake in gem pans. These are excellent made of Graham flour.

Rye Muffins.—Two cups each of meal flour and sour milk, 2 spoons soda, 1/2 cup molasses and a little salt. Bake in a quick oven heated gem pans.

Cream Muffins.—The yolks of 4 well-beaten eggs, 1 tablespoon of 1 pt sweet cream, 1/2 teaspoon salt, flour enough to make a batter, the whites of the eggs beaten to a froth. Fill the hot, greased muffin rings half full the batter. Bake quickly.

But you will see how unhappy she must be, and now this. If it should come to her ears, if— Oh!" cried she, clasping her hands, "if I were a man I should like to kill him."

Her face was deadly pale in the moonlight; her lips quivering. Stronge felt the blood grow warm about his heart. He asked himself at this moment whether it were not his duty, to obey even her vaguest wish. Why not throw Lord Varley's falseness in his teeth, and—

"As for her," said Constantia in a low tone, between the teeth—she was looking straight before her, she had apparently forgotten Stronge—"I shall let her know," she said; "I shall certainly speak to her."

"To Lady Varley?" asked he in dismay.

"Lady Varley! No! But to her, Mrs. Dundas! My—my cousin." She seemed to shrink from the word. "She shall know at least what I think of her. I shall compel her to listen. She shall give up all thoughts of Lord Varley. Oh, Mr. Stronge!" cried she turning to him with flushed cheeks, you do not know, perhaps, that she was once engaged to him. They were lovers; they quarreled; they both married; and yet now! Oh, it is terrible! And she is my cousin. I feel as if I, through her, were injuring Lady Varley. Was there ever anything so disgraceful, so wicked?" She paused nervously, and then suddenly burst into tears. "Oh!" she sobbed miserably, "I wish—I wish I had not seen it."

"So do I from my heart, my poor child," said Stronge earnestly. He drew her towards him impulsively, and she leant her forehead against his arm, and cried there until her agitation grew milder. It did not seem strange to her that she should thus lean upon him; her mind was entirely absorbed with her grievous discovery. But Andrew Stronge comprehended the meaning of her indifference to his presence, and the grasp of despair tightened on his heart.

"You will be sensible," he said presently; "you will not speak to Mrs. Dundas to-night; you will wait for a good opportunity, and then do what you can. Promise me this."

"Well, yes, it shall be as you wish," she sighed heavily, but her sobs ceased, and she dried her eyes, and drew herself up to her full height, and began to wish she hadn't been so absurd. She remembered that Stronge had had his arm round her, and that she had cried upon his shoulder; she blushed crimson, and a pang of fear shot through her. What would—she checked this thought, and blushed even deeper in doing so—what would anyone think of her, could they know it?

She felt unreasonably angry with Stronge, but the anger died as she raised her eyes, most reluctantly, to his. Who could be angry with that grave, kindly, anxious face? She turned away, and let her gaze descend upon the gravel at her feet, and slowly, thoughtfully, drew her fan through her fingers.

"I am tired," she said wearily. "Let us go back to the house."

They entered it by the armory door; the hall inside was brilliantly lit by lamps with blood-red shades, and a subdued crimson glow was the consequence. It lit up the faces round with a warm radiance. Almost the first person Constantia saw on entering was Donna Dundas, the second was Featherston. Not that they were together; Donna was smiling with quite an ineffable sweetness at the Italian, Coronis, and Featherston was leaning against the opposite wall. His eyes were on her.

There were, however, so many other people in the small stone hall, that Constantia, bewildered at first by the bright glow, did not see where Featherston's gaze dwelt. A band, as you know, got the smallpox."

"Anything so considerate!" murmured Donna.

"Inconsiderate, she thought it, as she had a trumpety sort of a conscience somewhere. She was good-natured, always, and she made up her mind to give him a final spell of nursing before deserting him forever; she therefore told Major Blackwood she could not possibly start on her honeymoon with him, until she had seen the old man safely through his illness."

"And the major, of course, very wisely declined to go a-honeymooning with a young woman fresh from a tainted atmosphere," put in Donna flippantly.

"Oh, as for a taint more or less," said Mrs. Ronayne-Power, with a shrug of her shoulders, "that could hardly harm her. She was well enough off in that line. As for Major Blackwood, you wrong him. He was so infatuated by that little wretch, that he declared publicly he envied her husband his smallpox, considering she was going to nurse him. And nurse him she did, night and day, got highly complimented by the physicians for her wifely devotion, was held up to the entire parish by the rector as a sample of what a woman should be; and the very morning she got her husband downstairs for the first time as a convalescent she made a clean bolt of it with the major."

"Bless my stars!" exclaimed Barry. "It is the oddest thing I ever heard of, if it happened—so. She is a regular heroine."

"Of a rather irregular story," put in Stronge, who was annoyed.

"A Christian martyr in my estimation," said Donna, with a yawn.

Quite a little concert of praise and blame arose, that Featherstone, in his usual cynical way, brought to an end.

"There isn't a sound idea in the whole of that tale," he said languidly. "Not one, I assure you. I should know."

"Why should you know?" demanded Barry, with studied politeness but a truculent eye. He was in the mood just then that made him intolerant to any man upon whom Constantia might have chanced to cast a favoring eye.

"For various reasons," returned the other coolly. "At all events, I know this much: that she left her husband, not because of his illness, or the major, but because she had been delicately reared and she couldn't stand snuff. He took it by the spoonful, I'm told; she is now living—by herself, recollect—somewhere on the Riviera."

"I am glad she chose a nice quiet spot, where English tourists don't intrude," said Donna, making a faint grimace.

"Do you mean to say she hasn't gone off at all?" asked a pretty woman, leaning forward out of the background; she seemed interested, and in a degree disappointed. She was thinking of going off herself, and was grieved in that she could not count on some one who had given her a lead.

"Be comforted. She has," said Mrs. Ronayne-Power, with a sneer. "If not in a coach and four with the major, at least in her good looks. I saw her just before she started for that solitary trip to the Riviera that good Mr. Featherston would persuade us about, and her reck was a perfect picture of bones. It was at Lady Vaughan's, and all the men fought shy of her. One couldn't wonder. She was so thin that I should think it would hurt one to dance with her. Even Maserene—you know the sort of man he is, and the sort of woman he likes—even he never went near her all the night."

"What luck for her!" said Stronge in a peculiar tone.

he drew back. He went up to Constantia instead. It seemed to him on the instant that the innocent, unsophisticated girl was infinitely the more desirable of the two.

"As we missed that last dance," he said, with a friendly smile, "I hope you will give me this instead. It is only a square dance, indeed; but still half a loaf, you know, is better—sometimes—than no bread."

Constantia crimsoned and then grew pale. She clasped her hands nervously.

"I am so sorry," she stammered; "but—but I have promised it to—"

"I see," interrupted he coldly. "You are determined, then, to deny me! No, do not trouble yourself to explain who it is. I can understand. But to be cast aside for him a second time to-night seems—"

"You are wrong," she cried eagerly; "quite wrong. This dance belongs to Mr. Dundas. He does not dance anything except the squares, and his asking me was such a special sort of thing that—"

Stronge, who was standing at a distance, could see but not hear, and he hoped honestly that those apparently angry words would end in a settled coldness. But, even as he hoped, he knew it was in vain. Featherston had met the girl's anxious eyes, had seen the tears in them (raised by him for the second time), and had been subdued thereby. There was always something about Constantia that held him captive au fond, however his thoughts might wander occasionally and most unworthily here and there amongst the more experienced beauties of his world.

He bent over her now, and his voice sank to a whisper—a rather loving one.

"You have been unkind," he said; "you must acknowledge that. And yet—I believe you!"

Constantia smiled at him through her tears; to speak was beyond her. She knew that she was unutterably happy; she felt that he had forgiven her. And he looked so handsome, so aristocratic; his eyes were so full of feeling, his nose so ducal, that she knew she was right in being happy. And yet why did he haunt the footsteps of Mrs. Dundas? Why did he so often look at her? Garrett Barry. Mr. Stronge—they did not show the reigning beauty such open devotion. And yet how superior he was to either of them! He had seemed eager to make up the small quarrel with her (Constantia), and yet, did he love her? Did—did she love him?

She fell into a sound sleep that night—without answering either question.

MOTHER WAS TO BLAME.

Jock and Annie were to get married, and she had confided to him that her age was twenty. After the ceremonies and festivities were over they both went home and retired for the night. Annie's mother resided next door, and, being up early the following morning, thought she would give the happy couple a "rap up."

On the way to their door she suddenly remembered it was Annie's birthday. Knocking loudly at the door, she bawled out:—

"Come away, Annie, get up; you ken ye're thirty the day."

Jock, who was the first to hear the voice, astonished his mother-in-law by shouting:—

"For guinness sake get up, Annie, for we've slept ten years."

Gather the corn when it is prime for eating, remove shuck and silk, scald sufficiently to kill all the germs of life and dry quickly either in the sun or shade. To make good apple butter the apples should be ripe, free from rot and clean. To one barrel of cider, use five buckets of apples pared and cut in rather small pieces. Put the cider on to boil very early in the morning; skim it until clean. When nearly half boiled away put in the apples. When they are dissolved and fall to the bottom begin to stir and keep it cooking, stirring all the while until it is fine, dark and rich and it will keep for years. It is better without sugar or spices added but if they are preferred they should be added a short time before it is taken from the fire. If sealed airtight while hot, it need not be cooked so long, but the long cooking makes it richer, also more convenient as it may be used as needed and simply tied over. A wooden stirrer with a long handle is a convenience so one may stand far from the fire.

DOMESTIC RECIPES.

Never-Failing Cookies.—Two eggs, one and one-half cups granulated sugar, one cup lard, one cup sweet milk or cream, a little nutmeg and salt, one teaspoon soda, one tablespoon baking powder sifted in with the flour.

Sugar-Syrup for Cakes, Etc.—Put two cups of sugar and a half cup of water in a sauce pan over the fire, stir till the sugar is dissolved, then let simmer very slowly for ten minutes, till it is a clean syrup. This is perfectly pure, and is so sweet that less is necessary than usual.

Mustard Pickle.—Cut into small pieces two quarts of green tomatoes, twelve large cucumbers, one quart of string beans, two large cauliflower, add twenty-four small cucumbers and thirty-six button onions. Wash them, place them in a kettle, sprinkle one pint of salt over them, place a plate on them supporting a weight (a flatiron will answer) and let stand over night. Drain, return to the kettle, add weak vinegar to cover and boil gently for one-half hour. Have boiling in another kettle three quarts of cider vinegar, one pound of brown sugar, one ounce each of turmeric and celery salt, one-fourth pound of white mustard seed, one small box of mustard and three tablespoonfuls of white pepper. Drain the pickle in a sieve. Put two quarts of it into the dressing let it boil and then remove with a ladle; continue until all is cooked. Pack in glass jars and fill them up with the boiling hot dressing. Seal carefully.

Cold Chicken Pie.—Cut up two tender chickens as if for frying, and put them in a saucepan with two and a half quarts of water, a bouquet made of sweet marjoram, basil, parsley, three bay leaves, a sprig of thyme and a small blade of mace. Simmer until well cooked, adding to the pot when the chicken is about half done one-half pound of bacon cut into small pieces and thoroughly smashed. A quarter of an hour before the chicken is removed add half of a small can of truffles cut in slices. Boil eight eggs very hard, cut them in slices and arrange them on the bottom of an earthen dish. Cover with a layer of truffles, then one of chicken meat, and continue until the dish is two-thirds full. BIGGEST PENSION LIST.

1,000,000 PENSIONERS IN THE UNITED STATES.

$138,000,000 Is Distributed Annually Among Soldiers and Sailors.

Perhaps the careless, shiftless way Uncle Sam sometimes has of conducting his public business is not more clearly shown in any direction than the manner in which he formerly, and even yet to some extent, carries on his Pension Department. The latest figures show that, in his generosity, in this department he disburses no fewer than 1,000,000 pensions annually, amounting to over $138,000,000 among soldiers and sailors, who have become disabled in his wars, or their widows; and all the while he is doing so he fully recognizes that not a few of these millions find their way into the coffers of frauds. But if you twit Uncle Sam's officials on this, they merely reply, "Oh, well, it isn't nearly so bad as it used to be."

The very lowest pension Uncle Sam allows to any of his former soldiers or their widows is $6 a month, and this for rheumatism, or any kindred, not disabling, disease, contracted after war, and shown to have been come by through hardship and exposure in the field. The average pension for a private, however, is $8 a month; and from this sum they rise to as much as a trifle over $35 a month for total disability. The average pension for a sergeant is $12 a month, and those for commissioned officers rise in proportion to their rank. In addition to this, a special pension of $2 a month is allowed for all pensioners' children under the age of sixteen.

DEAD PEOPLE WHO DRAW PENSIONS.

It may interest many people to know that, roughly speaking, there are about one hundred old American soldiers or their widows living in or about London who quarterly draw pensions, and they may always be seen on the appointed days at the American Consulate in St. Helen's Place, London, where a young man specially looks after their cases.

Perhaps the best illustration of how easily Uncle Sam is cheated is to be drawn from the fact that there are still on the pension lists a few widows of soldiers who are supposed to have fought in the Revolutionary War. This was ended in 1781, with the surrender of General Cornwallis at Yorktown. These are obviously frauds, but as the officials cannot positively prove them such they have to obey the law, and so the claims are paid. The supposition for their validity is this—It is instanced that the soldier, who was slightly over twenty when this war closed, lived long after, and in his eightieth year married a girl of eighteen. The wife would now be somewhere about eighty years old, and though there are several such claimants, where in reality there might rightfully possibly be one, the Americans think it would be a pity to deprive these old ladies of the Government's support during the few remaining years they have to live notwithstanding that the fraud has been carried on for years and years. So they let them go.

Curiously enough, if a person is detected in obtaining a pension from the country by fraud they are not prosecuted, nor even sued for the amount obtained. The claim is simply dropped, and nothing further is done in the matter. The officials argue that it would hardly do to be continually prosecuting the lame, the halt, and the blind.

THEY CATCH THEMSELVES

BURGLARS SAVE THE POLICE MUCH TROUBLE.

How "Guff" Kelly Was Neatly Trapped.—Found Unconscious in a Refrigerator.

"Guff" Kelly, one of the most uncatchable thieves who ever worried the police, finally took the trouble to trap himself neatly, for their benefit, only two months ago. His climax came when he broke into Mr. Clement Mason's house in Duke street, London, England. He certainly would have made an extremely fine haul, for he managed to open a large safe, of full "bank" size, containing a big collection of notes and foreign securities. "Guff" was a very quick and clever worker, and he always drilled his safes so as to get at the lock mechanism, and open it without blowing up the "works."

This one, being an old-pattern Morlock safe, gave him a lot of trouble; and after work he managed to swing the door open on its own hinges. He stepped right into the safe, to get at the cashboxes and rolls in the farther end; but he forgot—or did not know—that the old Morlock safes have spring doors that swing to slowly, and shut themselves. The consequence was that the door snapped behind Kelly, and he turned, to find himself neatly caught.

But a unique case, and one much more awkward for the victim, was the self-capture of a novice named Bowie in the art of housebreaking, who found his way into Mr. Goldscheider's place in the Cromwell Road, London. Bowie, apparently, had two or three equally raw "pals" with him, and, as there was not much in the way of valuables left lying about in the house, they devoted themselves to stealing eatables and odds-and-ends. After leaving the usual silly message on the table, Bowie went to the butler's pantry, where there was a big refrigerator, containing several joints. This happened during the very hot weather last July, and the

with ice-blocks. Bowie, with an eye to the meat, got inside, and he was trapped in the same way as Kelly, but in much worse circumstances. He immediately raised a hullabaloo, for the refrigerator had no latch inside; and his companions bolted, and left him in the lurch. The icy-cold enclosed air soon told severely on Bowie, and he yelled lustily for help, gradually being overcome and exhausted by the severe cold and the strain. When rescued in the morning he was unconscious, and with difficulty revived. He is now getting plenty of exercise and discipline.

Still more amusing, except for the subject of it, was the way in which the housebreaker Simpson trapped himself—quite a unique case. He was never lucky at his trade, and had been caught and sentenced several times; but eventually he got into a big house in Merriion Square, Dublin, through another house next door which was undergoing repairs and covered with

SCAFFOLDING AND GIRDERS.

It was a dark night, and in climbing along the outside of the house he lost his hold, and fell. RECIPES FOR CLEANING.

In cleaning bronzes, brasses, etc., there is no better way than to first dust carefully with a soft cloth, moisten a cloth with sweet oil, then rub again with a cloth and polish lastly with a chamois skin.

Oxalic acid is the best agent for cleaning brass. Apply it with a flannel cloth and polish briskly with a chamois skin.

Stale bread crumbs will clean spots from pictures, etchings, or photographs. Never use the crumbs after they are discolored. Always rub in one direction.

Dark wool can be cleaned with a cloth moistened with oil and turpentine or with kerosene; but dust carefully first.

Cloths wrung out of salt water are the best for cleaning matting.

A feather dipped in oil will work wonders for old hinges, locks and door knobs.

under the few remaining years they have to live, notwithstanding that the fraud has been carried on for years and years. So they let them go.

The claim is simply dropped, and nothing further is done in the matter. The officials argue that it would hardly do to be continually prosecuting the lame, the halt, and the blind.

A FEW OF THE TRICKS.

Up till about eight years ago the pension list used to average as high as $180,000,000 a year, but when Mr. Cleveland became President a wholesale scrutiny of the strictest character was brought to bear upon them, with the result that a reduction of no less than $10,000,000 a year was able to be brought about by striking off the lists the most glaring of the frauds. How much more therefore it might still be reduced will appeal readily to the imagination.

These are some of the frauds discovered:

One man was drawing a regular pension because of deafness he was supposed to have contracted through a shell bursting close to his ear; but when the deputy pension inspectors came to look up what employment he was in, it was found he worked in a telephone office, answering calls! This was one of the amusing cases.

Men who had followed the army for their own profit as sutlers, and who had formerly provided the soldiers with tobacco and delicacies, at exorbitant rates, were found to be on the lists without numbers. Widows who had married again, and therefore forfeited their pensions, were also found to be among the most numerous of the defrauders. Now, each quarter, widows have to bring with them a voucher signed by two reliable witnesses who know them, showing that they have not married during the interval since they collected their last claim. In many instances, also, relatives used to keep on drawing pensions after the persons who were entitled to them had died.

But the strongest fight the Government had was against so-called "Pension Agents," many of whom still flourish. These "agents" used to buy up pension claims, and then go on collecting them at an enormous profit so long as they would be paid, sometimes even after the entitled pensioner was dead. But the Government dropped a heavy hand on them. Now they flourish, ostensibly as the attorney of the claimants, contending that they only deduct a small commission for their services. It is hard to get ahead of them at this game, but a very close watch is kept upon them and so successfully that gradually they are dropping out of existence.

Not the least example of the laxity on the part of Uncle Sam in the paying of his pensions is the fact that he does not stop them even when the recipient is in his pay.

It is a standing rule in the American civil service that old soldiers should always be given the preference over all other comers. So, if an ordinary applicant stands first on the examination list, and an old soldier is fifth or sixth, the old soldier generally gets the position. This is very commendable; but why when he begins to draw a government salary of say from $600 a year as a messenger, to $3,000 a year as a first class clerk, he should be still entitled to remain on the pension lists, is a question that no American has ever yet been able to solve. But so it is.

SCAFFOLDING AND GIRDERS.

It was a dark night, and in climbing along the outside of the house he lost his hold, and fell. Luckily for him, he struck a projecting girder a few feet below, with a swing-hook on it for hauling hods up and down. By a miraculous chance this hook caught in the slack of Simpson's clothes, and held him firmly, and he was suspended in midair, face downwards, fifty feet from the ground, and kicking like an impaled beetle. Nobody saw him, and he hung there for some time; but when day broke, and he saw the depth below him, he fainted. An early crowd soon gathered, a posse of police unhooked the unlucky burglar, after a good deal of trouble, and he was marched off to get a little matter of seven years' imprisonment.

Even that was not as bad as the experience of an elderly burglar named Griffiths, whose appearance was so respectable the police always knew him as "the Deacon." "The Deacon" let himself into a house in West Bromwich, England, unannounced, about a year ago, after waiting about the leads of the roof all day. He got in through a skylight, and entered a tankloft. While clambering round the sides of this, encumbered by his lantern, he dropped the latter into the water, and thus left himself in utter darkness. Trying to find his way out, he presently fell into the cistern himself—a large galvanised tank, with high sides, and holding of water. He could not reach the top to pull himself up, and at first swam round like a rat in a pail, yelling for help. Presently he found he could just stand up, with his lips above the water, but the cold told on him; and when his yellings and kickings brought the scared family to the scene, he was pretty far gone. He recovered, however, and is still doing the second of his five years at the country's expense.

More burglars are caught accidentally by casual electric wires and machines than all the regular burglar-alarms put together. McViney, the housebreaker who gave the police so much trouble before his final capture, trapped himself in this way. He had the bad luck—for himself—to break into the residence of Mr. Graham Bellow, the electrician, at Greenock, Scotland, and manage the first part of the business without a hitch. But while rummaging among the electrician's belongings, he came upon an electric accumulator, charged with a heavy voltage, and the handles of it gave him a

A SEVERE SHOCK.

As most people know, it is impossible to let go of electric transmitters which are giving a strong current; the muscles of the wrist refuse to act, and the current held McViney securely, at the same time racking him with a heavy, continuous shock. The trapped burglar stood it as long as he could, and then yelled for help; and by the time the owner ran in in his dressing-gown, McViney was dancing, as he held on to the transmitters, and laughing hysterically. The burglar was a powerful man, and always desperate when it came to close quarters; but he was helpless as a child when the current was turned off. And when the police arrived he was still prostrate. He is now employed on Government work.

18. "Behold, we be thy servants. This they said as they fell down before his face. This was not to obtain for his love, but seeking to obtain that favor which he had already freely bestowed upon them. For 17 years the brethren of the church had enjoyed his favor (xlvii, 2) for loving kindness, yet now they stood abjectly before him to obtain that which had been theirs fully all these years. There are Christians of 20 or 30 or 40 years ago who passed through Christ the forgiver of sins and were made children of God and joint heirs with Christ, yet never sure that they are saved, never rejoicing in Him, but hoping for day to be good enough for them if they can only prove faithful.

19, 28. "Fear not, for am I the place of God?" What they meant was true penitence before God, against whom they had so greatly sinned and to whom perhaps had never yet truly turned. in the Fire Valley and Okanagan districts around Wauchope. At the places named the rims of coal basins are cropping out, and boring is being carried on for the purpose of locating the deeper parts of the deposits. There are similar indications in the west of the Province, from Princeton in the Similkameen Valley to the Stump Lakes, North Thompson River and Hat Creek. The coal basins in the Hazelton district are said to equal those of the Crow's Nest in quantity and quality. Just now the producing coal fields of British Columbia are those of Vancouver Island and the Crow's Nest Pass. Although the deposits in the last-named area were made accessible only last year through the opening of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, the output of coal was 206,803 tons, of which 103,231 tons were used for coke making. In Vancouver the yield was 1,383,376 tons, of which only 47,053 tons were converted into coke. The Crow's Nest mines are capable of a much greater output than those of Vancouver; indeed the estimates of some engineers have placed the quantity of coal within this area at twenty-five billions of tons, which would permit a delivery of 70,000 tons a day for 1,000 years. This coal is said to be better adapted for coking than any other in America, the coke produced possessing high calorific power, and great crushing strength. As for its steam-producing quality, the Crow's Nest coal is said to have borne the hard tests applied to it by the British Admiralty, which has agreed to substitute it for Welsh coal so soon as the completion of a railway should facilitate the transmission of it to the coast.

Hitherto iron has not been reckoned among the mineral treasures of British Columbia. It is certain, however, that there is in the Province a plenty of iron ore of a good class, which may be turned to account one day in an iron-manufacturing industry, operated in conjunction with the coal mines of the Crow's Nest Pass. According to the report of a provincial mineralogist, deposits of very good magnetic ore have been discovered recently in the neighborhood of the Alberni Canal. We repeat, however, that, as yet, it is principally as a purveyor of copper and coal that British Columbia attracts attention in the mineral markets of the world.

THIRD WATCH OF THE NIGHT!

There are honest men passing up and down the street. Here is a city missionary, who has been carrying a scuttle of coal to that poor family in that dark place. Here is an undertaker going up the steps of a building from which there comes a bitter cry, which indicates that the destroying angel has smitten the firstborn. Here is a minister of religion who has been giving the sacrament to a dying Christian. Here is a physician, passing along in great haste. Nearly all the lights have gone out in the dwellings, for it is the third watch of the night. That light in the window is the light of the watcher, for the medicines must be administered, and the fever must be watched, and the restless tossing off of the coverlid must be resisted, and the ice must be kept on the hot temples, and the perpetual prayer must go up from hearts soon to be broken.

Oh, the third watch of the night! What a stupendous thought—a whole city at rest! Weary arm preparing for to-morrow's toil. Hot brain being cooled off. Rigid muscles relaxed. Excited nerves soothed. The white hair of the octogenarian in thin drifts across the pillow, fresh fall of flakes on snow already fallen. Childhood, with its dimpled hands thrown out on the pillow and with every breath taking in a new store of fun and frolic. Third watch of the night! God's slumberless eye will look. Let one great wave of refreshing slumber roll over the heart of the great town, submerging care and anxiety and worry and pain.

LET THE CITY SLEEP.

But, my friends, be not deceived. There will be to-night thousands who will not sleep at all. Go up that dark alley, and be cautious where you tread lest you fall over the prostrate form of a drunkard lying on his own doorstep. Look about you, lest you feel the garrotter's hug. Look through the broken window pane and see what you can see. You say, "Nothing." Then listen. What is it? "God help us?" No footlights but tragedy ghastlier and mightier than Ristori or Edwin Booth ever enacted. No light, no fire, no bread, no hope. Shivering in the cold, they have had no food for twenty-four hours. You say, "Why don't they beg?" They do, but get nothing. You say, "Why don't they deliver themselves over to the almshouse?" Ah, you would not ask that if you ever heard the bitter cry of a man or a child when told he must go to the almshouse. "Oh," you say, "they are vicious poor, and therefore they do not deserve our sympathy!" Are they vicious? So much more need they your pity. The Christian poor, God helps them.

Pass on through the alley. Open the door. "Oh," you say, "it is locked!" No, it is not locked. It has never been locked. No burglar would be tempted to go in there to steal anything. Only a broken chair stands against the door. Shove it back. Go in. Strike a match. Now, look.

BEASTLINESS AND RAGS.

See those glaring eyeballs. Be careful of society if it is hushed up. A merchant prince, if he gets noisy and uncontrollable, is taken by his fellow revellers, who try to get him to bed or take him home, where he falls flat in the entry. Do not wake up the children. They have had disgrace enough. Do not let them know it.

HUSH IT UP.

But sometimes it cannot be hushed up when the rum touches the brain and the man becomes thoroughly frenzied. Such a one came home, having been absent for some time, and during his absence his wife died, and she lay in the next room prepared for the obsequies, and he went in and dragged her by the locks and shook her out of the shroud and pitched her out of the window. Oh, when rum touches the brain you cannot hush it up!

A great deal of what is called Christian work goes for nothing, for the simple reason it is not practical. As after the battle of Antietam a man got out of an ambulance with a bag of tracts, and he went distributing the tracts, and George Stuart, one of the best Christian men in this country, said to him: "What are you distributing tracts for now? There are 3,000 men bleeding to death. Bind up their wounds, and then distribute the tracts."

We want more common sense in Christian work, taking the bread of this life in one hand and the bread of the next life in the other hand. No such inapt work as that done by the Christian man who went into a hospital with tracts, and, coming to the bed of a man whose legs had been amputated, gave him a tract on the sin of dancing.

But there is a man who will not reform. He says, "I won't reform." Well, then, how many acts are there in a tragedy? I believe there are

FIVE ACTS IN A TRAGEDY.

Act first of the tragedy: A young man starting off from home; parents and sisters weeping to have him go; wagon rising over the hill; farewell kiss flung back. Ring the bell and let the curtain fall.

Act the second: The marriage altar; full organ, bright lights; long white veil trailing through the aisle; prayer and congratulation and exclamation of, "How well she looks!"

Act the third: A woman waiting for staggering steps. Old garments stuck into the broken window pane; marks of hardship on the face; the biting of the nails of bloodless fingers; neglect and cruelty and despair. Ring the bell and let the curtain fall.

Act the fourth: Three graves in a dark place—grave of the child that died for lack of medicine; grave of the wife that died of a broken heart; grave of the man that died of dissipation. Oh, what a blasted heath with three graves! Plenty of weeds but no flowers. Ring the bell and let the curtain drop.

Act the fifth: A destroyed soul's eternity; no light, no music; blackness of darkness forever. But I cannot look any longer. Woe! woe! I close my eyes to this last act of the tragedy. Quick, quick! Ring the bell and let the curtain drop. "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart rejoice in the days of thy youth, but know thou that for all these things God will bring you into judgment." "There is a way that seemeth right to a man, but the end thereof is death."

TOUCHING THE SPOT.

"Mrs. McLubberty," said the physician, addressing the mother of the youthful patient, "something must be done to cheer up the little fellow—to raise his spirits and arouse his interest."

Turning to the bedside, he asked, kindly:

"My lad, would you not like to be out this pleasant afternoon, spinning your top, or watching the other boys at their merry games?"

The sick boy closed his eyes wearily, as one who is not long for this world, and has lost all interest in the frivolities of a mundane existence.

"Wouldn't you enjoy trundling your hoop or playing 'touch' with your little schoolfellows?" persisted the physician sympathetically.

The invalid's only reply was to sigh like one who is almost gone.

"Sure, now, doctor," exclaimed the lad's mother, "that's not the way to be after living the bye up at all, at all! Ar-r-r, Mickey, me dar-r-r-rlin', wudden't yez loike to be runnin' about, t'rowin' stones through McRafferty's windy, or tying the widdy Mulvaney's pet cat to the railway lines, an' watchin' the trains squanch the loife out uv it?"

The sick boy promptly sat up and demanded his trousers in a voice of authority.

KILLING A 10-FOOT SHARK

HOW TIGERS ARE TRAPPED BY BIRD LIME.

Some Queen Methods of Hunting Fish and Flesh—The Pig and the Snake.

If you were handed a fish, a dog and a strip of bamboo and bidden to kill a ten foot shark with these crude implements, the odds are that you would decline the unequal contest. Nevertheless the Malays annually kill thousands of these voracious monsters, without incurring the slightest risk.

The method is as follows. The bamboo is split into a strip measuring about four feet in length by one inch in width. Having these well charred at each end and pointed, it is coiled into the smallest possible space and sewn in the fish skin. The dog is next killed, trussed, and his interior cavity refilled with the delusive fish skin.

Forthwith Jack Shark swallows the dog at a gulp, and his doom is sealed. Three or four days later, when he has digested the dog and the fish skin, the bamboo flies apart and gradually penetrates the great brute's sides with fatal effect. It is not pretty sport, but it is marvelously effective and absolutely safe.

When you were handed a piece of meat, a bundle of leaves and a pot of bird lime you would scarcely feel yourself a match for a Bengal tiger. But the little Bengalis are particularly successful in catching Mr. Stripes with these crude implements.

The meat is first of all tied to the bough of a tree, some twelve feet from the ground. The leaves, which are the size of large plane leaves, are next smeared with the bird lime, and thickly strewn, sticky side uppermost, beneath the bough. Mr. Stripes, perambulating past, smells the bait and

ON THE FARM.

DAIRY FARMING IN NORWAY.

A saeter is a summer ranch or a dairy farm peculiar to Norway—a cabin among pastures, way up in the mountains, where the cattle are driven during the summer months and butter and cheese are made, writes Mr. W. E. Curtis. Almost every large farmer has a saeter. When the spring field work at home has been finished and the grass is fresh and juicy on the hillsides the dairy maid and the herder and sometimes the farmer and his whole household, call the cattle and drive them up the steep trails. The saeter may be ten or twenty-five or even fifty miles distant. It may require several days to reach it. In such cases the cattle are kept together by the herders and dogs, and the family camps out in the open air if they cannot find accommodations in the farm houses along the trail. In olden times it was customary to begin the summer pilgrimage on St John's Day, June 24, or St. Hans' Day, as they call it, but in these later times people are not so particular about observing dates and signs and omens as they used to be. The cattle remain on the mountain side until the middle of September and often later, as long as their owners dare run the risk of an early snowstorm. Then they are rounded up and driven back to the farm in the valley. The butter and cheese, the results of the reason's labor are carted down and sent to market, and the manure, which has been carefully preserved in the course of the summer, is also brought home and

SPREAD UPON THE FIELDS.

The total value of the dairy products of Norway is about $3,500,000 in our money, and nearly all of the butter and cheese is made at the saeters and on the individual farms. There are a number of co-operative creameries, and it is estimated that they handle 250,000 gallons of milk daily, but they are only found in thickly settled sections of the country. Where the population is scattered it is not so convenient to send the cream out of the house, and there is a prejudice against it. The Norwegians are conservative and very stubborn about some things. When their faith is fixed it cannot be shaken, and the women of the farming communities prefer to make their own butter and cheese. A few creameries are fitted with separators and other modern dairy machinery, but the great majority of the people still pour their milk into the broad shallow tubs of wood and skim it in the old-fashioned way.

Nearly all the surplus butter made in Norway is shipped to Denmark. In the art of butter-making the Danes have been more successful than any other nation, and by reason of its superior quality, Danish butter commands a higher price in England, the great butter market of the world, than the best grades offered by other countries. Denmark, therefore has become the foremost butter-exporting country of the world, but a considerable amount of Danish butter is made in other countries.

HER ANNUAL EXPORTS.

will reach nearly 200,000,000 pounds, valued at something like $60,000,000 or $75,000,000. Of this total, perhaps thirty-five or forty million pounds come from Sweden, Norway and Finland. It is taken into the packing houses at Copenhagen and other cities and there worked over, mixed with the native Danish butter, colored with the juice of the beet root, and as tume, although I have never seen it worn. The garments worn by the saeter-jenter in this part of the country are very plain and ordinary, and seem to have been selected for wear and not for looks.

There is a good deal of romance about saeter life in books, but I should say there is very little in actual experience. Many of the charming fairy stories in Norwegian literature have their scenes at these mountain dairies. The saeter girls have a peculiar and melodious cattle call, known as the "Huldrelok." Every saeter girl can sing the cattle call and the cows will come to her. It resembles the yodel of the Tyrol. We visited a saeter recently and found two young people, a boy and a girl, neither of them over seventeen, if we could judge from appearances, in charge of fifteen cows, and they expected to stay in that desolate place all summer, making butter and mycost, the native cheese, which is a brownish color, and looks like maple sugar. It is not so strong as Dutch or Swiss cheese and has a sweet, insipid taste that is very much liked by the Norwegians. It is only one of the many varieties, however. You can get a pungent cheese without difficulty. In the country districts cheese is one of the chief articles of diet, and at the little inns along the highways it is furnished in all grades of taste and smell.

ALCOHOL DRINKING.

Dr. Reid Says Prohibition Increases Drunkenness.

"Are southern nations less addicted to alcoholism than northern?" This question gave rise to an exciting and acrid debate at a meeting of the Society for the Study of Inebriety, in London, England. Dr. Reid of the editorial staff of the Lancet started the debate thus:

"Teetotalers make more drunkards to redeem. Wherever they succeed in securing coercive legislation against alcohol, they swell the tide of inebriety. Among the southern nations of the world, where alcohol is found as one of the everyday beverages of the people, excessive drinking and consequent drunkenness are reduced to a minimum. London, Chicago and New York, which are without prohibition, have respectively only 7, 13 and 23 drunkards per 1,000, while Portland, Me., the classic prohibition state, has forty-two. 'I would advise temperance enthusiasts to cease their work and let natural law solve the question of alcoholism. Then eventually we will see drunkards eliminated and the human family made immune from the disease of drunkenness.'"

OTHER SIDE PRESENTED.

After eager and confused struggle for the floor, Secretary Charles Smith of the Kent County Temperance Federation, obtained recognition. He said:

"Dr. Reid's statements are preposterous. Carefully prepared statistics just published by the Board of Trade show that southern nations drink 58 per cent. more than northern peoples. High authorities assure us that southern Europe swims in wine, and hence heads towards the social decomposition and political impotence. England has free access to alcohol and yet it is becoming a land of toppers."

"Dr. Reid's American statistics are not worth the paper on which they are written. He says that Portland, Me., has forty-two drunkards per 1,000, whereas London has only seven per 1,000. Is the man ignorant or would he deceive us? In Portland every drunken man is arrested; hence these figures. The statistics of the City of London and its own magistrates agree that not

MAKES A LEAP FOR IT.

He misses, for the very good reason that it has been purposely placed a couple of feet higher than he can reach. Again and again he springs for it, and each time he alights upon a fresh lot of leaves, which stick fast to his huge feet.

Now he notices them and starts to try and lick them off, with the result that he transfers them from his claws to his face. He gets impatient, the lime gets into his eyes and makes them smart, and he redoubles his efforts only to redouble the number of leaves. Finally, he loses his temper, and half blinded with rage, fear, and bird lime, rolls over and over until he looks like a Jack-in-the-Grass. Then, when he is no longer capable of rational resistance, the wily native emerges and jabs him in some vital part.

Sometimes, however, Mr. Stripes is destined for Hagenbach's, Jam-rack's or some other great menagerie. Then the procedure is different. He is first of all trapped by an ingenious arrangement of weights and springs, which convert an innocent-looking cowshed into a four-sided wooden cell the moment he passes the threshold. His removal thence is ingenious.

A tube of string matting, measuring some twelve feet in length by about eighteen inches in diameter and strongly fortified with rattens and bamboo, is suddenly introduced lengthwise into the darkened cell. Mr. Stripes, who has meanwhile been stirred up by countless unseen hands, sees the welcome daylight, and leaps madly for it. But although he has sprung into the narrow tunnel, it is only to find

THE END SAFELY BARRED.

Before he can say "Jack Robinson" deft fingers have barred his exit from behind, and he is sprawling powerless in a straight jacket, which fits him like the skin of a sausage. His subsequent transport is merely a question of weight lifting.

In certain districts where the snake pest is a terrible nuisance, a curious trap is set for the larger pythons. A small hole, a few inches in diameter, is made low down in a stout wall. On either side of this hole a young porker is tethered and left to his fate.

The python speedily spots the external pig and swallows him. He then turns his attention to the internal animal, which he can only reach by wriggling the fore part of his body through the hole in the wall. Having swallowed the second porker, the python suddenly realizes the penalty of his piggishness.

Horrible to relate, he is now much the same shape as a dumb-bell, the thin part of which just fits the aperture through the wall, and the bulging portions of which (representing the swallowed porkers) effectually prevent him moving backwards or forwards through the wall. At this point it is etiquette to help him out of his difficulty by cutting him in two, and so saving the lives of the little pigs: Given a big python, and this sport can be very exciting.

THE FUTURE KAISER.

Characteristics of the German Crown Prince.

The recent visit of the German Crown Prince Frederick William to England was not an affair of pomp and ceremony. The prince, who is not yet twenty, was not hampered by a retinue. He travelled incognito and got the sort of pleasure out of his sojourn that any college student might who was making the most of his vacation. He strolled about London like any tourist, took snapshots at the monuments, visited historic places, and spent two or three days at a time at some of the great country houses.

The prince is taller than his father. He has fair hair and blue eyes. Those who remember his grandfather, the Emperor Frederick, find the resemblance to him quite striking, not only in appearance but in character. He has a sunny temper and a keen sense of humor, yet he takes a serious view of life, and is fitting himself, by travel and education, for the responsibilities which some time will devolve upon him. He is a good sportsman and a fine shot, he rides his horse well, and plays tennis with zest. He has some of his father's versatility, for he plays the violin exceptionally well, and draws and paints with skill.

The tie between father and son is a close one. Every detail of the prince's training, his course in the university at Bonn and his service with the Guards at Potsdam are matters of affectionate paternal solicitude. The Kaiser discusses public affairs with the prince, as a help to his education and the forming of well-considered opinions. The prince has the warmest admiration and affection for his father and fully shares his aspirations for Germany. To his mother the prince exhibits a chivalrous devotion.

will reach nearly 200,000,000 pounds, valued at something like $60,000,000 or $75,000,000. Of this total, perhaps thirty-five or forty million pounds come from Sweden, Norway and Finland. It is taken into the packing houses at Copenhagen and other cities and there worked over, mixed with the native Danish butter, colored with the juice of the beet root, and as people generally suppose treated by some secret process, which gives it a peculiar flavor and makes it less susceptible to the effects of heat, cold and dampness.

A good deal of Danish butter comes from the Norwegian saeters, where it is made entirely by hand with the most primitive utensils and processes. The saeter, or cabin, has seldom more than two rooms, one for living and one for work. The living room is comfortable, and rudely furnished like a hunting shack, with bunks fastened to the walls, a plain table, a few dishes and two or three hard bottom chairs.

is usually sixteen or twenty feet square; a big fireplace on one side, with an iron kettle hanging from a chain for the preparation of cheese, and the other three walls lined with shelves, upon which little shallow tubs of milk are placed for the cream to rise. Tin pans are never used in saeters and are seldom seen in Norwegian farm houses. The women prefer wooden vessels bound with brass hoops, which shine like burnished gold. When a Norwegian housewife cannot think of anything to do she scrubs her milk tubs.

The saeter is inclosed with a fence, which makes a sort of corral into which the cattle are herded at night, unless, as at some of the larger establishments, two herders are employed, when they are allowed to graze out continually, the herds- women and the herdsman being relieved every twelve hours. Women and men work on even terms on Norwegian ranches, and receive the same wages. There is little danger of the cattle wandering away, because the Norwegian cows are very domestic, and are so accustomed to be stabled that usually they have to be driven away from the house; but the mountain saeters are exposed to the wolves, which often attack them if they are not watched.

Lives to Tell (?) the Tale.

On Sunday night at Kingston the Iroquois hotel was the scene of a would-be tragedy, the principals being a young man well known in Napanee and a beautiful actress with the Tom Marks' Dramatic Co. It seems to be the same old story—"pretty girl, rejected lover, chloroform." This young man, however, was up-to-date and administered the poisonous liquid in a very small quantity, as he evidently was not ready to shuffle off this wicked earth so suddenly, and then it might cause his lady love sleepless nights for a week or so. Medical aid was summoned and the physician said it was a fake, as enough chloroform only was inhaled to render him semiconscious.

Sidney Pointer Won.

Sidney Pointer defeated Deveras, in the matched race, at the park on Friday last, winning in three straight heats. Deveras, with a mark of 2.11, is owned by Antoine Wendling, of Brockville, and was driven by W. McPherson. Sidney Pointer, 2.07, was driven by his owner, W. W. Moffatt, of Picton. The race was for $250 a side and brought together nearly all the sports in this part of the country. The last heat was particularly exciting. Sidney Pointer led the whole mile, until they reached the head of the stretch, when he broke, and Deveras passed him. Sidney Pointer quickly recovered, and the finish was one of the closest possible, Pointer winning by only a fraction. The time was as follows: 2.16, 2.17, 2.17. The last heat would

SOLE AGENTS FOR THIS DISTRICT.

When he did lose it, it was usually because someone had been treated unjustly. There came into the White House one day, among the throng who were anxious to beseech the president for this and that, a girl of not more than 18 years.

She carried her left arm in a sling, and now and then it seemed to pain her.

She was jostled this way and that, but she was patient, and at last was in the presence of the president, who said:

"Is there something I can do for you, my girl? What is your story?"

"I was a soldier, Mr Lincoln," she said, "and I can't get my pay."

The president looked searchingly and pityingly at her.

"You a soldier? Why, you are a young girl," said he.

"But I was a soldier," Mr Lincoln, and I was wounded three months ago in battle."

She told him, in the most innocent and childlike manner of speech, that she had put on boys clothes, enlisted in one of the Indiana regiments, gone to the front, taken part in several battles, and, at last, was badly wounded in the left arm.

"When they took me to the hospital," she said, "and began to dress my wound, I told them I was a girl, and I have been trying to get my three months' pay."

Mr Lincoln by this time was affected. "Tell me, he said "why you can't get your pay."

And she replied that the paymasters all said that they were not authorized to pay a woman for service as a soldier."

Then Mr Lincoln blazed with anger. He reached over to his desk and wrote swiftly a message, reading something like this:

To the Paymaster-General—Inquire into the case of this girl; identify her; if you find that she enlisted as a soldier, went to the front, was wounded in battle, pay her what is due her, and don't send her from one paymaster to another. If the second, auditor of the treasury objects to paying, let him know that it is my wish, and that I will be responsible."

And then, taking the hand of the girl in both of his, he said:

"My little child, I believe you have told me the truth. You have done a brave thing," and, as the girl thanked him and wept from the room, he turned and said: She represents the sentiment that will save this union.

A Sweeter Parting.

"So you wish to take my daughter away from me," remarked her doting father.

"Well—ah—that wasn't just exactly my thought," stammered the nervous young suitor; "my folks could perhaps spare me with fewer pangs."—Philadelphia Record.

Western Horses Sold.

A carload of western horses were sold by public auction in the Campbell House yard on Saturday last. These horses were really wild ones, having never been broken even to halter. Considering the time and trouble that will have to be spent on them, the animals brought good prices. After the sale the fun began from a spectator's point of view, but we venture to say that the poor dumb beasts took no interest in the proceedings from that standpoint. They were lassoed around the neck and choked until they dropped on the ground, when a halter was put on them with a long rope attached. The animals were then driven or dragged home. One of the horses got loose from its owner on Tuesday and gave him a fine chase before being captured. It jumped off the dock into the river near the swing bridge and swam to the Cement Works' dock, and was finally caught in the old mill yard at the west end of the town.

Of Interest to Every Person.

Czolgosz Electrocuted.

Leon F. Czolgosz was executed in the death chamber of the state prison at Auburn, at 7:12:30 o'clock on Tuesday morning. He made but a brief speech before his death. He said he was not sorry for what he had done, but expressed regret he had not seen his father. Czolgosz went to the chair showing no particular sign of fear, but in fact talked to witnesses while he was being strapped in the chair. "I killed the president because he was an enemy of good people—of the good working people. I am not sorry for my crime." These were his words as the guards hurried him into the chair. These words he supplemented a moment later, by mumbling through the half adjusted face straps: "I am awful sorry I could not see my father." Czolgosz retired on Wednesday night at ten o'clock and slept so soundly that when Warden Mead went to the cells, shortly before five Tuesday morning, the guard inside had to shake Czolgosz to awaken him. He sat upon the edge of his bed and made no reply to the warden's greeting of "good morning." The prison official took from his pocket the death warrant and read it slowly and distinctly to the assassin, who hardly raised his eyes during the perfunctory ceremony.

A Vicious Dog.

Master Harold Mouck, nephew of Mr. Robert Wales, was on Sunday attacked by a dog and had one of his ears nearly bitten off by the ferocious brute. Dr. Ward dressed the injury.

A Great Course.

The Hartman Course of Massey Hall, Toronto, has become a household word, not only in Toronto but in nearly every city and town in Ontario.

The conditions to this Course seem very reasonable, viz.: That a Course ticket consisting of five high-class attractions,

- 1 The Faddettes' Womens' Orchestra.
- 2 Eugene Page Concert Co.
- 3 Macdonald Male Quartette.
- 4 J. Wm. Macy.
- 5 Tyrolean Yodlers.

This entire Course can be procured for the small sum of $1.00. Non-subscribers to the Course will have to pay the regular price, 50c.

NOTICE—In order to give all an opportunity to hear the famous Faddettes' Womens' Orchestra, of Boston, the program will not begin till 9 o'clock at the Opera House, Saturday night, Nov. 2nd.

Fred Simkins, an orphan, about twenty-three years of age, who lived about three miles from Tamworth, lost his life Tuesday morning, being thrown from a rig. His skull was broken by the fall and he died within a few hours.

Nerve Energy and Eyeglasses.

A constant dropping wears away a stone. A slight eyestrain injures the health because it is constant. The strain which first manifests itself as a slight discomfort should be remedied at once. This we guarantee to do with glasses. Consultation free. Delays are dangerous.

A few boys and a bonfire gave the firemen a run up near the West Ward school on Tuesday evening, the plank walk having ignited. No serious damage being done. The alarm sounded box No. 26 very distinctly, but the firemen ran to No. 27. What was the cause of the error is what is agitating the public mind?

Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder.—Rev. W. H. Main, pastor of the Baptist Emanuel Church, Buffalo, gives a strong testimony for and is a firm believer in Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder. He has tried many kinds of remedies without avail. "After using Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder I was benefited at once," are his words. It is a wonderful remedy. Sold by A. W. Grange & Bro.—65
